The North Sta

CHATHAM, N. B, Nov.13,

A TRAGEDY OF 1819.

A good deal is being said the London papers just now the subject of hydropho Dealing with the question, Daily Telegraph recalls mou fully in the history of Can the death by hydrophobia of Duke of Richmond soon a his Lordship had commen what promised to be a succe ful term of official life. T Telegraph adduces, as an e dence that the bite of other a mals is sometimes as danger as that of a dog, the well-kno case of the grandfather of present Duke of Richmond, w was Governor General of Can in 1818, and died there in August of 1819 from the effe of a fox's bite. The story elaborately told by the late L William Lennox in his "F Years of Biographical Remin cences," and is well calcula to warn careless readers of a uninteresting volume agai the danger of putting their ha within reach of a so-called ta but really wild and chained- fox. We are informed by L William Lennox that his fat had determined on a tour inspection to the Upper Prov ces of Canada, and, after a fa well banquet to his civil and litary subordinates, the Duke off in the midsummer of 1 from Quebec in a Governm steamer, whose head was po ed up the St. Lawrence riv Lord William accompanied father, on whose staff he serving as military aide-de-ca as far as Montreal, whence Governor-General made his w to Fort William Henry, lying the south bank of the great dian stream. "Here," says L William, "occurred an incid of a most frightful nature wh totally changed the aspect of hitherto happy residence in t distant colony." It appears t one of the English soldiers Fort William Henry had and that officer there, nam Captain FitzRoy, owned a b terrier, between which and fox there had been several figh The fox was in a highly exci condition on the day when duke happened to take notice him, and just before mounti his horse to inspect the garris he rashly stooped down to the fox on the head. The a mal instantly snapped at duke's hand, biting him slight upon which he took hold of fox's ear, exclaiming, "Yo bite, will you, you rascal?" T brute at once seized him near lower joint of the right thum making his teeth meet in flesh. Little was thought the incident, and when the Du arrived at Kingston a fortnig later the wound had complete healed. He proceeded fr Kingston to York—now call Toronto—and thence went Niagara and on to Drummon Island, upon Lake Huron, th the most distant of our milita outposts in Canada. On his turn he stayed some days

PET FOX,
