CHAPTER XLII.

CONSULTATIONS.

Mr. Gryce was perfectly aware that the task before him was a difficult one. Summoning his two subordinates, he laid the matter before them.

"Do either of you know whether Mr. Orcutt's name has ever been associated with any private scandal, the knowledge of which might have given Mrs. Clemmens power over him?"

"I do not think he was that kind of a man," said Byrd. "I have heard nothing said in any way derogatory to his private character. Though a bachelor, he showed no disposition to marry, and until Miss Dare appeared on the scene was not known to be even attentive to one of her sex."

"He was sweet on a certain Miss Pratt," remarked Hickory. "But nothing came of it. She did not hold his fancy. Some folks declare she was so disappointed she left town. I remember overhearing some one say how hard Mrs. Clemmens was on the Pratt girl."

"When did Mrs. Clemmens come to this town?" asked Gryce.

"Fifteen years ago," replied Byrd.

"And Orcutt first put in his appearance at the same time."

"Where did he come from—have you learned?"

"From some place in Nebraska, I believe."

"And she?"

"Why, she came from some place in Nebraska too!"

"The same place?"

"That we must find out."

"Mr. Orcutt was renowned in his profession. Do you know any thing about his career?"

"I have heard that it was in this court he pleaded his first case. Don't you know more about it, Hickory?"

"Yes; Mr. Ferris told me this morning that Orcutt had not opened a law-book when he came to this town. That he was a country schoolmaster in some uncivilized district out West."

"Boys," cried Mr. Gryce, "she secret we want to know is of long standing. I will tell you why I think so. For ten years Mrs. Clemmens has been known to put money in the bank regularly every week. She got that money in payment of her silence concerning a past he desired to keep secret."

"But they have been here fifteen years and she has only received money for ten."

"She has only put money in the bank for ten. I do not suppose he was wealthy at the outset of his career."

"You advise us, then, to see what we can make out of his early life out West."

"Yes; and I will see what I can make out of here."

And, dismissing the two young men, Mr. Gryce proceeded to the house of Mr. Orcutt, where he entered upon an examination of such papers and documents as were open to his inspection, in the hope of discovering some allusion to the deceased lawyer's early history. But he was not successful. He paid a visit to Miss Firman, as being the only person who professed to have had any acquaintance with Mrs. Clemmens before she came to Sibley.

CHAPTER XLIII.

MRS. FIRMAN.

"Miss Firman, I believe? I am Mr. Gryce," the genial voice went on. "Perhaps the name is not familiar?"

"I never heard it before."

"Well, then, let me explain," said he. "You are a relative of the Mrs. Clemmens who was so foully murdered in Sibley, are you not? You must, therefore, be in a state of great anxiety to know who her murderer was. Now, I am in that same state, madam; we are, therefore, in sympathy, you see."

"You say I must be anxious to know who my cousin's murderer was. Has Craik Mansell, then, been acquitted?"

"A verdict has not been given."

"What do you want with me?"

"Well," said he, "I will tell you. You believe Craik Mansell to be innocent?"

"I do," she returned.

"Very well; so do I."

"Let me shake hands with you," was her abrupt remark.

"We are fortunately not in a court of law, and so can talk freely together. Why do you think Mansell innocent?"

"Why do you think him innocent?"

"I have talked with him. I have talked with Miss Dare. And I was present when Mr. Orcutt breathed his last."

"What has that to do with it? You did not know Mr. Orcutt then?" he inquired.

"I had not that honor."

"You have never, then, visited your cousin in Sibley?"

"Yes, I was there once, and he came while I was there, but that did not give me an acquaintance with him."

"He was reserved, then, in his manners, uncommunicative, possibly remorse?"

"Exactly."

Mr. Gryce drew a deep breath. This well seemed to be destitute of even a drop of moisture.

"Why do you ask about Orcutt? Has his death affected Mansell's prospects?"

"That is what I want to find out. Where did Mrs. Clemmens first make the acquaintance of Mr. Orcutt?"

"I always supposed she saw him first in Sibley."

This well was certainly very dry.

"She came from Nebraska, and so did he; now, why may they not have known each other there?"

"I did not know that he came from Nebraska."

Mr. Gryce drew another deep breath and let down his bucket again.

"I thought your cousin spent her childhood in Toledo?"

"She did, sir."

"How came she to go to Nebraska then?"

"Well, she was left an orphan and had to look out for herself. A situation in some way opened for her in Nebraska, and she went there to take it."

"A situation at what?"

"As waitress in some hotel."

"Humph! and did was she still a waitress when she married?"

"The subject was so painful we never discussed it."

"Why painful?"

"She lost her husband so soon."

"But you can tell me the name of the town in which this hotel was, can you not?"

"It was called Swanson then."

Swanson! This was something to learn, but not much. "You have not told me," said he, "why you believe Craik Mansell to be innocent?"

"Well," replied she, "I believe Craik Mansell to be innocent because he is the son of his mother. Craik has his mother's forehead and eyes, and no one will ever make me believe he has not her good principles also."

"I coincide with you madam."

"I hope the jury will." Miss Firman was called from the room, and Mr. Gryce found himself left for a few moments alone. His thoughts were far from cheerful, for he saw a long and tedious line of inquiry opening before him in the West, which, if it did not end in failure, promised to exhaust not only a week, but possibly many months, before certainty of any kind could be obtained. Suddenly he heard a voice raised from some unknown quarter near by, saying in strange tones he was positive did not proceed from Miss Firman:

"Was it Clemmens or was it Orcutt? Clemmens or Orcutt? I cannot remember."

A door stood ajar at his back. He was about to lay his hand on the knob when Miss Firman returned.

"Oh, I beg you," she entreated. "That is my mother's room and she is not at all well."

"She has just uttered a cry," said Gryce.

"Why, she is asleep," protested Miss Firman, as they entered the room.

"I am positive she spoke but an instant ago; I can even tell you the words she used."

"What were they?"

"She said: 'Was it Clemmens or was it Orcutt? Clemmens or Orcutt? I cannot remember.'"

"Poor ma! She was dreaming. Come into the other room and I will explain."

"Ma has not been quite right in her mind since the day I told her of the murder, and I often detect her murmuring words similar to those you have just heard."

"Are you sure?"

"What do you mean?"

"I mean," returned the detective, dryly, "that I believe your mother does not know what she is talking about when she links the name of Mr. Orcutt with that of your cousin who was murdered. They belong together; Mr. Orcutt was her murderer."

"Mr. Orcutt?"

"Hush!" cried Mr. Gryce, "you will wake up your mother."

He then said, with easy assurance:

"Your mother does not know that Orcutt is dead. She does not know that he was counsel for Mansell. Why should she connect his name with Mrs. Clemmens?"

"She knows he was her boarder, and that he was the first one to discover she had been murdered."

"That is not enough. Cannot your mother have some memories connected with his name of which you are ignorant?"

"No, sir; we have lived together in this house for twenty-five years. Ma could not have known any thing about him or Mary Ann which I did not."

"I grant the mental confusion," said he. "Was there never a time when she could have received some confidence from Mrs. Clemmens——"

"Mary Ann, Mary Ann!" came in querulous accents from the other room, "I wish you had not told me; Emily would be a better one to know your secret."

It was a startling interruption to come just at that moment.

"That sounds as if your surmise is true," she dryly observed.

"Let us make an experiment," said he, and they re-entered her mother's room.

The old lady lay as before in a condition between sleeping and waking. Mr. Gryce at once withdrew out of sight. Miss Firman, surprised, and possibly curious, took her stand at the foot of the bed.

"Was it Clemmens or was it Orcutt? I wish somebody would tell me," said the old lady.

Instantly Mr. Gryce, with his soft tread, drew near to the old lady's side, and, leaning over her, murmured gently:

"I think it was Orcutt."

Instantly the old lady breathed a deep sigh and moved.

"Then her name was Mrs. Orcutt," said she, "and I thought you always called her Clemmens."

Miss Firman stared at Gryce.

"Did she say it was Mrs. Orcutt?"

"She said——" But here the old lady opened her eyes, and seeing her daughter standing at the foot of her bed, turned away with a peevish air, and restlessly pushed her hand under the pillow.

Mr. Gryce at once bent nearer?

"She said——" he suggested, with careful gentleness.

But the old lady made no answer. Her hand seemed to have touched some object for which she was seeking, and she was evidently oblivious to all else.

"It is useless," said she; "she is awake now, and you won't hear anything more; come!"

And she drew the reluctant detective back again into the other room.

"Why did your mother put her hand under her pillow," he asked.

"I don't know, unless it was to see if her big envelope was there."

"Her big envelope?"

"Yes. Since she took to her bed she has kept a paper in a big envelope under her pillow."

"And have you no curiosity to find out what it contains?"

"No, sir. Why should I? It might easily be a piece of blank paper. My mother is not herself, as I have said before."

"I should like a peep at the contents of that envelope," he declared.

"You?"

"Wouldn't you open it if she were dead?"

"Yes."

"Will it be very different then from what it is now?"

"My mother would know it if I took them away."

"Put another envelope in the place of this one, with a piece of paper folded up in it."

"It would be a trick."

"I know it; but Craik Mansell can be saved even by a trick."

"Craik Mansell? What has he got to do with the papers under my mother's pillow?"

"I cannot say that he has anything to do with them; but if that envelope should contain, not a piece of blank paper, or even the letters of your father, but such a document, say, as a certificate of marriage——"

"A certificate of marriage?"

"Yes, between Mrs. Clemmens and Mr. Orcutt."

"Mary Ann the wife of Mr. Orcutt! Oh, that is impossible!" exclaimed the agitated spinster.

"Less improbable things than that have been found to be true in this topsy-turvy world," said he.

"Do you really think so?" she asked; and went with sudden impetuosity to her mother's room. Mr. Gryce's smile took on an aspect of triumph.

"I have it," she murmured, taking out a packet from under her apron and tearing it open with trembling fingers.

A number of closely-written sheets fell out.

CHAPTER XLIV.

THE WIDOW CLEMMENS.

"Well, and what have you to say?" It was Mr. Ferris who spoke. The week which Mr. Gryce had demanded for his inquiries had fully elapsed, and the three detectives stood before him ready with their report.

"Sir," said Gryce, "our opinions have not been changed by the discoveries which we have made. It was Mr. Orcutt who killed Mrs. Clemmens, and for the reason already stated that she stood in the way of his marrying Miss Dare. Mrs. Clemmens was his wife."

"His wife?"

"Yes, sir; and she has been so for years."

"It was while they lived West," said Byrd. "He was a poor school-master, and she a waitress in some hotel. She was pretty then, and he thought he loved her. At all events, he induced her to marry him, and then kept it secret. You see, he had the makings in him of a villain even then."

"And was it a real marriage?"

"There is a record of it," said Hickory.

"And did he never acknowledge it?"

"Not openly," answered Byrd. "The commoneness of the woman seemed to revolt him after he was married to her, and when in a month or so he received the summons east, which opened up for him the career of a lawyer he desired above all things, he started afresh. He told her his prospects had changed, and with them his tastes and requirements; that he could not and would not take her east with him as his wife; and while she replied that he must acknowledge her claims upon him by giving her a yearly stipend, according to his income and success. She went to Sibley, where she set up her own little house-keeping arrangements under his very eye. More than that, she prevailed upon him to visit her daily, and even to take a meal at her house. She would stand any thing but a rival. He knew this, and preferred crime to the loss of the woman he loved."

Will Asiatic Cholera Follow?
Mr. Joe Howard's theory that, one horror of a similar nature follows another to the number of three, has a chance for confirmation this coming summer if certain predictions prove true. First it was La Grippe: "A whim" the French define it. Second came deaths by scores from its after effects or from the many atmospheric changes of the past few months. Severe cases of pneumonia, bronchitis, intense catarrh and general loss of strength were the results, until death was almost welcome as a relief to the sufferers. So that this epidemic and its sequence has proven to be the most terribly realistic "whim" that ever infested this country. And now for number three: the theory is said to be advanced that the Cholera is very likely to find fertile soil in the generally debilitated constitutions of our people resulting from the effects of such a winter and spring as has just past. Whether the theory of three will be confirmed in this case or not remains to be seen. At any rate it behooves every person still affected by any of the complaints due to these climatic changes and epidemics, such as catarrh or bronchial troubles, to look well to themselves and see that every trace of the trouble is removed this present month; before the heat of summer still more debilitates their system. For years we have found that simple old remedy Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used as directed, to be the most certain remedy for all forms of lingering summer colds, catarrh or bronchial affections, as well as a preventive and cure for all kinds of summer complaints. It is absolutely certain that a remedy that has survived for eighty years as Johnson's Anodyne Liniment has done, must have more than average merit. We suppose there is not a family in this country but what has this good old fashioned remedy in the house. If there is, we advise them to get it at once or write the manufacturers I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., for a pamphlet describing its various uses for the last eighty years. Now is the time. Delays are dangerous, and an ounce of prevention is worth many pounds of cure.

FRENCH RAILWAY ROBBERIES.

Cornelius Vanderbilt and Dr. Seward Webb Said to Be the Sufferers.

LONDON June 7.—The rumored robbery of Cornelius Vanderbilt and Dr. Seward Webb has stirred the entire French police and detective forces. The robbery occurred between Paris and Calais, and consisted of rifling the luggage, valises, bags, portmanteaux, trunks, etc., that contained articles of great value.

The police upon being question refused to say that the victim was Mr. Vanderbilt, replying simply that it was a prominent American and the robbery occurred while the parties were en route from the South.

The general belief is, however, that Mr. Vanderbilt is the sufferer.

The Continental lines admit that many American travellers complain of being subjected to this sort of robbery on both cars and boats. Sergeant Middleton, chief detective South Eastern Railway Charing Cross, being interviewed, said: "There is, no doubt, strict truth in the charges that many thefts occur in travellers' luggage. It is the work of two gangs of thieves, each gang having four men, one working in England the other in France. One gets the passenger lists from the various steamers, talks with the servants of rich travellers, learning from them as nearly as possible the contents of the different pieces of luggage.

This information is then telegraphed to the other gang in France, and they are expected to finish up the work. When either the English or French police got on the track of these rascals they simply changed sides, each operating to the side of the Channel, and thus it become very difficult to catch them.

"Americans are always their choice prey, and it would be well to warn intending tourists to keep a sharp lookout. It is foolish to carry jewelry or other small valuables in a travelling bag, for these sneak thieves have sharp knives with which they slit the leather so adroitly that one hardly knows when it is done."

Practical Pointers.
As a simple, natural laxative, stomachic, blood, brain and nerve tonic, when taken as directed, the value of Burdock Blood Bitters cannot be overestimated, while as a cure for constipation, indigestion, liver diseases, impure blood, sleeplessness, nervous and sick headache, it is the best that money can buy.

Yellow Oil has done good work for 30 years in curing muscular rheumatism, lumbago, croup, quinsy, colds, sprains, bruises, burns and all pains and aches. It is equally good for man or beast.

What it Will Do.
1 to 2 bottles of B B B will cure Headache.
1 to 3 bottles of B B B will cure Biliousness.
1 to 4 bottles of B B B will cure Constipation.
1 to 4 bottles of B B B will cure Dyspepsia.
1 to 6 bottles of B B B will cure Bad Blood.
1 to 6 bottles of B B B will cure Scrofula.
In any case relief will be had from the first few doses.

Moses Had Asthma.
—My husband had asthma for eight years with severe cough, and his lungs also were affected. He could neither rest, work, nor get relief from any medicine he tried. Some time ago we got Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, and after taking six or eight bottles his cough is entirely cured, the asthma greatly relieved, and his lungs greatly benefitted.
MRS. MOSES COUCH, Apsley, Ont.

Biliousness and Acid Stomach.
Having used your Burdock Blood Bitters successfully for some time past for my complaint, biliousness and acid stomach, I have never found its equal. THOS. W. SUTTON, St. Thomas, Ont.

For Colds or Pain.
Yellow Oil is the best remedy I ever used. I had a healing breast 15 months ago, which was very sore. I got no relief until I tried Hagyard's Yellow Oil, which gave instant relief.
MRS. JOS. CONNETT, St. Marys, Ont.
For croup, quinsy or colds use Yellow Oil.
