God Understands.

It is so sweet to know,
When we are tired and when the hand of pain
Lies on our hearts, and when we look in vain
For human comfort, that the heart divine
Still understands these cares of yours and mine,

Not only understands, but day by day,
Lives with us while we tread our earthly way;
Bears with us all our weariness, and feels
The shadow of the faintest cloud that steals
Across our sunshine, ever learns again
The depth and bitterness of human pain.

There is no sorrow that He will not share
No cross no burden, for our hearts to bear
Without His help, no care of ours too small
To cast on Jesus; let us tell Him all—
Lay at His feet the story of our woes,
And in His sympathy find sweet repose.

The Gift.

After the man passed us, I turned and looked at him again.

'Who is that?' I asked.

'Macey,' said my friend, 'a carpenter.'

'Where does he live?'

'I don't know exactly. Over on the west side somewhere, I believe.'

From the minute I saw him I felt I must know him. There was something unusual about him. That was no ordinary man, even if he did wear a workman's garb.

I have several times formed sudden attachments for men, and have never been sorry. So I felt no reluctance in following the impulse that set me to inquiring the next afternoon for Macey, the carpenter.

I found the place, a six-roomed cottage with a good yard. A little to one side and back of the house was a small building that appeared to be a workshop.

It was after work hours and they had told me I would probably find him there.

I did not knock at the house, but went across the yard to the other building and stepped in. The old man was dressing a walnut board. He did not stop or inquire my business, but talked along in the friendliest sort of way as he planed the board. I sat on one end of the bench and watched him work, and listened to his shrewd, good-humored observations.

It was the brightness of his eye and the lines of happiness in his face that had first attracted me. When an old man, especially one who has toiled, loves life as this one did, there is something about him worth knowing.

'You love your work?' I said.

'Yes,' he replied, and laid down his plane; 'but there is one thing about it I don't like. People want poor work and ugly work. The houses we have to build are mostly ugly and inconvenient. Then they use such poor material and build on such shaky foundations. I have to do it because they demand it, and that is my daily bread.' A look of regret was on his face.

'That is a beautiful piece of wood,' I said, running my hand over the smooth walnut board. 'I have almost a passion for wood.'

'So have I.' His eyes lighted up. 'I have some fine pieces. Let me show you.'

He brought out of a big box a dozen or more specimens of wood—live oak, white oak, mahogany, hickory, cherry, cedar, all of unusual fineness, and carefully dressed.

'Do you know,' I asked, when we finished examining them, 'why I came up here? I wanted to learn your secret. I met you on the street yesterday, and I knew at once from the light in your face that something has kept you in love with your work and the world.'

He laughed, a little embarrassed.

'Young man,' he said, after a moment, 'there isn't any secret about it. I don't know that I can tell you exactly what you want to know.

'But it seems like this to me. When I was a young fellow I noticed that nearly everybody wanted to do one thing, and had to do another to make a living. Generally they got sour, and hated the work they had to do. I always loved wood, and it was my notion to make something perfect out of it. I had to work at the carpenter's trade, to make a living, but I fitted up a place here, and when the day of ugly work was over, I would come in here and work out my own ideas.'

'And where is some of the work?' I asked eagerly.

'It is in there.' He pointed to a back room.

'May I see?'

He took a key out of the watch pocket of his overalls and unlocked the door.

I do not remember that any picture or painting ever gave me a greater satisfaction than I felt on looking round that room.

Here, worked out in loving patience, was the expression of a man's life—for is not more than color. It was poetry, color and sculpture worked out in wood. And through the perfection and harmony of the workmanship ran a strong sense of usefulness.

The first thing we examined was a bookcase.

'I worked nine months at that,' he said. And I did not wonder when I noted the perfect symmetry, the faultless joints, the marvellous finish of the wood.

There were many articles, and all of them seemed to me to be the consummate expression of art, workmanship and adaptability.

The thing I most admired was a library table. It was so simple, so finely finished, so perfect in outline, that I lingered over it lovingly.

'That is art,' I said. 'Art applied to things of daily use. I never saw a more beautiful thing than that table.'

He was evidently pleased, but he said nothing. He seemed almost shy here among his creations. I imagined that he felt that he was laying bare his too intimate self.

I hesitated several minutes to ask the question in my mind. I was almost afraid to, yet I wanted that table as I had never wanted a thing of wood.

'Will you sell it?' I asked at last.

He shook his head. 'I never sell them,' he said. 'That is part of my theory. A man should have something of his very best that he won't exchange for money.'

I certainly showed my disappointment; but I appreciated his feelings.

'I will not sell it, but I will give it to you,' he said simply.

'Oh, no!' I was embarrassed. 'I could not take it for nothing.'

A look of disappointment came into the carpenter's face.

'I am sorry,' he said. 'I was in hopes you would.'

'Why, there is nothing I would prize so much,' I answered. 'But it represents so much of your time and work.'

'That is why I wanted to give it to you. I think you understand it and love it.'

'Thank you,' I said. 'Do you give many away?'

'Whenever I find a man that appreciates it, I give him what he wants. I imagine,' he added apologetically, 'that every time he sees it I'll be telling him what is a good piece of work, and when he remembers that the good will of a gift went with it, he will think kindly of old man Macey.'

'Yes,' I said humbly, 'I think he will, and will be a better man for having known one who never sold his best.'

How Nerve Cells Are Broken Down

Every man or woman who works with the brain uses up daily an enormous amount of nerve force. Millions of tiny nerve cells are broken down and must be replaced if mental and bodily efficiency is to be maintained.

If brain fag, headaches, sleeplessness or irritability set in, the evidence is plain that nature is not rebuilding as fast as work is breaking down. You cannot allow this depleting process to continue long if nervous prostration or paralysis is to be warded off.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will help you to get the balance on the other side of the account, so that each day will add a little to your stock of health and vitality. A man whose work is largely mechanical may keep going with health below par, but the brain worker must have a clear head or fall behind in the race. Restore the wasted nerve cells with Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and know the joys of good health and success.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

For the Newlyweds.

Try to be satisfied to commence on a small scale.

Try to avoid the too common mistake of making an unwise effort to begin where the parents ended.

Try not to look at rich homes or covet their costly furniture.

Try going a step further, and visit the homes of the suffering poor when secret dissatisfaction is liable to spring up.

Try being perfectly independent in the first, and shun debt of all its forms.

Try to co-operate cheerfully in arranging the family expenses, and share equally in any necessary self denials and economics.

Try to be cheerful in the family circle, no matter how annoying may be the business cares and house keeping trials.—McCall's Magazine.

The Temperance Rally.

The weather on Tuesday was all that could be desired and the Berwick Camp Ground was the centre of attraction for the whole Valley. Large numbers came by train and by two o'clock a vast crowd had assembled under the trees to hear the well-known speakers who were to address the people.

Rev. J. W. Aikens was the first speaker. His clear, logical and forcible manner held the closest attention of his hearers, as he dealt with the iniquitous traffic, its close connection with other evils which demand public attention, and the duty of Christian men and women in regard to these.

The Rev. H. R. Grant gave personal experiences connected with his attempts to approach members of the provincial government in regard to necessary amendment to the Temperance Act. He heavily scored the class of voters who pray, 'Thy Kingdom Come,' and, by their votes, do all in their power to retard its coming.

Mr. E. B. Newcombe sharply criticized the churches as to their attitude on the matter of Temperance Reform. Both the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches have their committees on Temperance and Moral Reform. Other religious bodies are carrying on work along the same lines, but the only practical results have been accomplished through the Kings County Temperance Alliance. If the Churches were as active as they might be; if Church members could divest themselves of any fear of results to one political party or the other he believed that Kings County could be made practically dry even with our present defective laws.

In spite of difficulties and discouragements, there is a bright side to the picture. The vote—splendidly large under the circumstances—polled by Mr. C. A. Campbell at the provincial election of last summer is a proof that the Kings County Temperance Alliance is a Power to be reckoned with. Not many years ago the liquor dealers of Kentville had only derisive laughter for the few who dared to oppose them. Since the day when some thirty clergymen and as many laymen had joined in a legal raid upon a Kentville bar room, those dealers have known that Alliance is in deadly earnest.

Mrs. (Dr.) J. W. Brown, representing the W.C.T.U., gave a brief address, and the meeting closed with the Doxology.

At the evening service a resolution introduced by Mrs. Brown, was carried asking the federal parliament to pass an act prohibiting the manufacture, importation or sale of cigarettes.—Berwick Register.

Stomach Trouble and Constipation.

No one can reasonably hope for good digestion when the bowels are constipated. Mr. Chas. Baldwin, of Edwardsville, Ill., says, 'I suffered from chronic constipation and stomach troubles for several years, but thanks to Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets am almost cured.' Why not get a package of these tablets and get well and stay well? Price 25 cents. For sale by all dealers

Power of Insects.

If asked to name the strongest animals, most persons begin with the largest, the elephant, and continue with oxen, horses and soforth. This is of course, correct insofar as their total horse power is concerned; but for real strength, proportioned to the size and weight of the animal, one must go to the insect world. Compared with the strength of insects, the strength of almost any large animal, and man, is absurdly out of proportion to size.

A man is considered strong if he can drag a mass weighing three or four times as much as himself, but the beetle will walk with five hundred times his own weight. If a man were placed under a wooden box with five times his weight on top to hold it down, he would remain there indefinitely; but to retain a stag beetle prisoner in the same way, one must pile on top of the box at least eighteen hundred times its weight.—Our Dumb Animals.

THE LAWRENCE FLOUR MILLS CO. LIMITED

'Mebbe 'Tain't So.'

'Mebbe 'tain't so,' reads a striking placard that greets the eye and brings the smile as one enters a certain printing office where they believe they are looking on the bright side of things.

The comfort-compelling phrase originated in a story told of a grouchy Scotchman who, by his unfailing ill forebodings and gloomy observations about things in general, and the work around the office in particular, 'got on the nerves' of his fellow laborers. Desperation brings inspiration. They thought of a plan to cure him. Every time he came around with his pessimistic prophecies and 'Gloomy Gus' comments on things, they said never a word, but solemnly presented him with one of these placards, which they always managed to have at hand.

They were effective, and his cure was complete. When things are looking blackest, when we are in a state of nervous apprehension bordering on panic, and things appear to our blurred vision to be on the very verge of disaster, it might be worth our while to recall the inelegant but optimistic little phrase, 'Mebbe 'tain't so.'

Vacation at Home.

When, after the holidays, my family reduced itself to two, I decided, furthermore, that the very best place for both was right at home, where I had all the comforts that would be lacking elsewhere. Every one seems both rest and change and many need them much oftener than they get them; but I was convinced that they were largely a matter of mental attitude.

The only preparation for the mental trip was to set the house in perfect order and lay in a supply of simple eatables. I made no engagements for a week, so that there should be no obligations. Then I sat down with a good book, shut my eyes, and was off on the boat of imagination, sailing to the land of dolce far niente. It took only a minute to reach there, and what a glorious time I had!

I read for hours at a time, with never a twinge of conscience; I wrote long letters; I spent half-days in the library browsing; I sewed if I wanted to; I took naps in the daytime, and in the evening I went to bed or else I coaxed the Other One—who unfortunately, wasn't on a vacation—to play a game with me.

I had a delightful week, and woke up one morning home again, rested, with happy memories, and ready to take up responsibilities once more.—Harper's Bazar.

A vast amount of ill health is due to impaired digestion. When the stomach fails to perform its functions properly the whole system becomes deranged. A few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets is all you need. They will strengthen your digestion, invigorate your liver, and regulate your bowels, entirely doing away with that miserable feeling due to faulty digestion. Try it. Many others have been permanently cured—why not you? For sale by all dealers.

Attracting Birds In Summer.

The things that most attract birds are food, water to drink, opportunity to bathe, and safe nesting-places. In summer food is so abundant everywhere that most birds pay no attention to dishes of food provided for them.

The attraction for the largest number of birds in summer, however, is water. Drive a stake in the middle of the yard, away from all bushes and trees where cats may lurk; saw the stake off two feet from the ground; nail to the top of it a block of wood one foot square; set on this block a dish or pan at least the size of the block, and about three inches deep; cover the bottom of the dish with sod from which all the dirt has been shaken.

To this bath will come, both to drink and bath, robins' orioles; grosbeaks, catbirds, blue jays, bluebirds, wrens wood-thrushes—in fact, all the birds of the neighborhood. The open place and the elevation make such a bath safe from cats, and also enable you to get a good view of the birds. The sod bottom keeps green in the water and serves to give the bathers confidence.

A stake about six feet high that stands in some open place in the yard will be used by several birds as a lookout from which to watch for insects. The kingbird will dart from it to catch flies; the blue jay will perch on it to watch for beetles and caterpillars in the grass and robins and wood thrushes will take a flying hop to it—seemingly on general principles.

Baby's Great Danger During Hot Weather.

More little ones die during the hot weather than at any other time of the year. Diarrhœa, dysentry, cholera infantum and stomach disorders come without warning and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in the home where there are young children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will cure the baby. Mrs. Adelore Ouillette, St. Bruno, Que., writes:

'My baby was troubled with his bowels, but Baby's Own Tablets soon set him right again.' The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Hostess (at party)—And does your mother allow you to have two pieces of pie when you are at home, Willie?

Willie (who has just asked for a second piece)—No, ma'am.

Well, do you think she would like you to have two pieces here?

Willie (confidently) — Oh, she wouldn't care. It isn't her pie.
