BY THE SHORE OF THE RIVER.

Through the gray willows the bleak winds are raving
Here on the shore with its drift-wood and sands:
Over the river the lilies are waving
Bathed in the sunshine of Orient lands:
Over the river, the wide, dark river,
Springtime and Summer are blooming forever.

Here, all alone on the rocks, I am sitting,
Sitting, and waiting—my comrades all gone—
Shadows of mystery drearily flitting
Over the surf with its sorrowful moan,
Over the river, the strange, cold river,
Ah! must I wait for the Boatman forever?

Wife and children and friends were around me,
Labor and rest were as wings to my soul;
Honor and love were the laurels that crowned me;
Little I recked how the dark waters roll,
But the deep river, the gray, misty river,
All that I lived for has taken forever!

Silently came a black boat o'er the billows;
Stealthily grated the keel on the sand;
Rustling footsteps were heard through the willows:
There the dark Boatman stood, waving his hand,
Whispering, "I come, o'er the shadowy river,
She who is dearest must leave thee forever."

Suns that were brightest and skies that were bluest
Darkened and paled in the message he bore.
Year after year went the fondest, the truest,
Following that beckoning hand to the shore,
Down to the river, the cold, grim river,
Over whose waters they vanished forever.

Yet not in vision of grief have I wandered;
Still have I toiled, though my ardors have flown.
Labor is manhood; and life is but squandered
Dreaming vague dreams of the future alone.
Yet from the tides of the mystical river
Voices of spirits are whispering ever.

Lonely and old, in the dusk I am waiting.
Till the dark boatman, with soft, muffled oar
Glides o'er the waves, and I hear the keel grating,
See the dim, beckoning hand on the shore,
Waiting the over the welcoming river
To gardens and homes that are shining forever!

NOTES AND NEWS.

UNITED STATES.

Hiring a penitentiary is rather a queer kind of speculation. That of the State of Missouri (with all the inmates there at present and likely to come) has been all the expenses of the prison and a bonus of $1,000 to the State, which retains, we suppose, the appointment of most of the officers of the prison. The convicts will be worked for the benefit of the lessors, and it is estimated that Missouri will save over $100,000 annually by this convenient arrangement.

There is bitter irony, if there be no truth, in the story of the Chicago drug clerk who had already sent to a premature sepulchre several worthy citizens. He said he believed that he must light the gas hereafter when putting up prescriptions in the night, as he could not tell by the sense of smell so well as he could before he had the catarrh. However, it's an ill subject for jesting. How many people are killed every year by careless druggists, and especially by careless doctors of medicine, can never be known. Naturally, when the disease is of the violent sort, the death is attributed to it. Add to this carelessness the adulteration of drugs, and it isn't pleasant to think of the matter.

GENERAL.

A curious instance of belated development has occurred in Conway, N. H. It is that of a man who was born an invalid. At ten he could neither walk nor talk. At that time, apparently idiotic, he began to walk on his toes. Losing his balance one day, he fell down, striking his head, when he cried out "Bump!" This was the first and only word he was known to speak until he was nearly twelve. Then he tumbled over again, and again cried out "Bump!" After this he talked freely. As soon as he began to talk, he could read nearly as well as other children of his age. He is now in trade in company with his brother, and is doing most of the work of the store. Whether he keeps up his mental culture by occasionally falling down and crying out "Bump!" we are not informed.

One of those calm and tranquil ladies, who are so successful as travellers, lately rushed up to a train on the point of leaving a London station, and with one foot on the step, frantically called for a porter to tell whether that was the train she wanted or not. A very elderly bachelor, perceiving the lady's dilemma, obligingly took the sleeping infant she carried, in order that she might more easily enter the carriage. At that moment the train started, and a porter appeared just in time to drag away the nervous lady from her dangerous struggle to get into the moving car. Awful were her feelings, but worse were those of the elderly bachelor, who was a stout person in spectacles, and who in vain attempted to stifle the wild howls of the frighted child by dandling it, amid the laughs of his companins in the carriage. The little creature was deposited at the next station, and the horrified old gentleman sank back almost fainting in his seat, wiping beads of agony from his scarlet visage.
