W. C. A. ON D. G. S.—Last week out he flew at the Salvation Army. It is in Chatham known as well as Smith is known that he always takes a nap during the sermon. In fact we have seen his picture, with great round face, eyes shut, and mouth open like the open bung of a beer barrel, taken by the "bad boy" of the congregation. But a week ago last Sunday morning his "forty winks" were disturbed by the Big Drum of the Salvation Army. And now "that gentleman" rises in indignation, awake for once, and demands redress.—Union Advocate.

THISH, MY FREN' ISH A SCOTT ACT TOWN.—"Oh where shall I go for a drink, good sir, oh where shall I go for a drink? I can't get a drop in your blamed old town where it once could be had for a wink. It's a mortal long way across the bridge and the night is abominably cold. Oh tell me my friend is there never a place on this side where the stuff is sold." The stranger paused and the citizen's, brow was clad with an ominous frown, as he said in a voice that was husky and dry, "Thish my fren' is a Scott Act town"—Fredericton. Capital.

HE WAS RUSSELL SAGE—A Houlton lawyer ran across an interesting old farmer on the train not long ago. They went to discussing railroads on which the lawyer is well informed, and the latter ventured to correct what he deemed an erroneous statement in regard to the resources of a New York road, made by the old farmer. But the farmer knew better for he had been a director of the road for thirty years. Then they went to talking about elevated roads; and the farmer acknowledged that he had "some shares" in the New York line. In surprise the lawyer asked: "Who are you? My name," replied the old farmer, "is Sage,—Russell Sage."

LOST HIS CERTIFICATE THROUGH DRUNKENESS.—Captain Smith R. N. held a court of inquiry, on Aug. 28th, into certain charges preferred against Alex. Chisholm a Nova Scotian, who holds a captain's certificate. Chisholm had been mate of the steamer Antonio and had while in that position been guilty of getting drunk and committing certain wrongful acts. He failed to appear at Halifax in person but sent a letter acknowledging his guilt. Therefore the court cancelled his certificate but commended that it be returned to him at the expiration of a year if his conduct proves in that time that he is worthy of it or capable to hold the position which it would give him.

WHERE DID HE GET HIS LIQUOR.—The first drunk, it is said, that has been seen in town since the Scott Act election, was staggering along York street yesterday afternoon, when he was met by a friend and quickly escorted to his home before coming in sight of a policeman. It is stated that he got his liquor at a place on Westmorland street, which has come to the rescue of the unfortunate topers in their time of need, and where it is said, quite a little stock has been laid in for this charitable purpose. There is a bonanza in it for the proprietor provided he only works it carefully, but, if he doesn't slacken up on the quantity that was furnished the drunk yesterday, it will be all up with him.—Fredericton Gleaner.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the donor by the members of Havelock lodge for his generous gift. The officers were elected and installed by District W. M. C. N. Skinner. A. I. Trueman, W. M.; Robert Carson, D. M.; Wm. Worden, chaplain; R. W. Scribner, rec. sec.; John Kerr, fin. sec.; Jas. Wolfe, treas.: R. H. Rubins, D. of C.; M. Mitchell, lecturer; R. O. WHO IS CHAMPION?

Says the Toronto Empire: The question has been put. Who is now sculling champion of the world? In our opinion the championship has simply lapsed, and until the respective champions of America and Australia come together no oarsmen can have a distinct claim to the title. It is true that Stansbury had challenged Searle, before he died, to row him over the Paramatta championship course, but as he had previously been beaten by the latter, the same as O'Connor had, it is difficult to see how, by the mere act of challenging, he had established his claim to the world's championship, which is of a different quantity to that of the championship of a single country.

This much, however, must be said that if anybody has a claim to the honor it is Stansbury as being the last challenger, but we have never heard that even he had posted a forfeit anywhere to make his challenge good. As for O'Connor's offer to row Stansbury, that has no connection with the championship, seeing that at the time it was made the real champion was living, and that the challenge was restricted to America, which country or continent had no claim at the time to the race as the home of the then holder of the title. That Stansbury is the best sculler in Australia is not even assured, and there are evidently some who think the man McLean his equal. It is true that when Beach resigned, his mantle fell, by some strange method, on Peter Kemp, but we disputed then, and do dispute now, the right of a champion to bequeath or resign his title to anybody who has not challenged him in the ordinary orthodox way, namely, with a deposit of hard cash. For these reasons, then, the Empire holds that there is no professional champion sculler of the world at the present moment, unless, indeed, Stansbury had a forfeit up to row Searle in the latter's lifetime, in which case the title would become his by default. But it would be a barren and unearned title, the full right to which could not be established until the holder had met and proved his supremacy over the champion of America. If there were an oarsmen of any repute in England who had not gone down before an Australian or an American, he, too, would have a right to be considered; but, as there is not one, the claim must be taken as resting entirely with the respective champions of the antipodes and this continent. As to the New York Herald's assertion that Beach is once more champion of the world, it only proves how little that paper knows about the ethics of professional rowing, for, if, by death of the champion the title relapses to the previous holder, then Peter Kemp is that man.

KEMP CLAIMS THE TITLE

Sydney, Dec. 11—Oarsman Peter Kemp from whom Henry Searle won the world's championship, in a published interview claims the title made vacant by Searle's death.

It Happened in Halifax, and the young Men Were all Broke up When They Heard the Story.

Last night about half past ten o'clock several young men, returning to their homes across the common, heard a female voice coming from the direction of the Egg pond, calling "Police," "Murder" and "Help." They ran towards the spot, says the Echo, in its account of the affair, from whence the sounds came and when they got near the pond they saw a man running in one direction and a female hastening in the opposite direction. Some of the young men went after the female and others started after the man. When they caught the girl, who proved to be a menial in a house on Quinpool road, she asked to be taken to the nearest house, which was done, but she would not tell the cause of her outcry. She had been badly frightened, however, and when a couple of the men went with her to the house where she was at service she fell while going up the steps. In the meantime the man had been caught, but he said he had given no cause for the outcry; he was seeing the girl home from the house of one of her relatives. The crowd thereupon took him to the relative's house where they were joined by the head of the family, and thus strengthened they went out to the house where the girl was staying and called her out for an explanation. But after all the trouble it proved to be nothing serious, as the girl said there was nothing wrong and the man who was caught running away asked if there was any young man in the crowd who would not ask a young lady for a kiss if placed in a similar position. This broke his hearers all up and they seperated and went to their homes.

The City Council of Charlottetown Defines its Position.

The city council of Charlottetown, P. E. I. is made up of a most chivalrous body of men. It appears that a short time since a woman of that city was arrested and imprisoned for a breach of the Scott Act; The council thereupon took the matter under advisement and passed the following preamble and resolution without a dissenting voice.

Whereas, Woman in all ages, savage and civilized, has been an object of love, affection and respect; and

Whereas, A woman in this city has been imprisoned for a breach of an enactment not supported by public opinion and contrary to British freedom, justice and liberty; and

Whereas, The breach of said enactment consisted in selling an intoxicating beverage freely used by all classes, from Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, who is Head of the Church and Defender of the Faith, to the humblest of her most loyal and most dutiful subjects; and

Whereas, The various legislatures in the British dominions, exercising authority delegated to them from the people, legalize the importation and manufacture of such intoxicating beverages by imposing thereon a specific charge;

Therefore Resolved, That in the opinion of this Council, imprisonment of a woman for a breach of an enactment destructive of individual liberty, opposed to the spirit of the age and denounced by theologians and moralists of the highest standing, is an act worthy of the days of the Star Chamber and Jeffreys.

The Sugar Cargo.

Good progress is being made with the work of discharging the barque Tanjore's cargo of sugar at Sand Point. The platform built on the wharf is just the height of the floors of the cars. The sugar is in splint mats, much the same as dates come in. As it is hoisted out, eight mats at a time, it is carried on hand trucks into the cars standing along the edge of the platform. The men are kept supplied with plenty of large C. P. R., cars and no time is lost waiting for cars to be shifted. About 600 mats are put in each car, and as the cargo consists of over 1,300 tons or 42,732 mats about 72 cars in all will be required to carry the sugar to its destination. The sugar is from Iloilo in the Phillipine Islands, and is being forwarded to Montreal to the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining company (limited). The facilities at Sand Point for loading sugar cargoes on the cars are good enough if plenty of cars are with th[illegible] be load[illegible] Point [illegible] pared [illegible] governi[illegible] bridge.

Serious Accident.

About noon to-day as Samuel Kee, Sr., was driving a horse, with sloven attached, on to the North wharf, the whiffletree got loose and struck the horse causing it to run away. Just as the frightened animal was getting up speed the wagon collided with a loaded coal cart. Mr. Kee had fallen off the wagon and narrowly escaped being crushed by the loaded cart. He was, however, very seriously injured. Both hands were badly bruised and cut, one of them having the flesh torn off to the bone. His head was cut and his back badly hurt. Mr. Kee is a man of about 65 years of age. He was taken to his home on Brussels street in a coach, and is suffering a great deal of pain. One shaft broke and the horse got clear and ran some distance before it was captured.

Mr. Davis' Visit to Montreal.

[From the Montreal Gazette.]

The news of the death of Jefferson Davis caused a sensation among Montreal's older citizens, most of whom remember the celebrated Southern leader during his visit to this city after the close of the civil war. A reporter of the Gazette called upon Mr. John Lovell, who was the closest friend of the Davis family during their stay within our borders, and learned the following facts: It was in the fall of 1867 that Mr. Lovell first knew that Jefferson Davis' wife's family were residing in this city. At the request of the Rev. Mr. Robertson, of Toronto, Mr. Lovell called upon Mrs. Howell, mother-in-law of the Confederate President, who with her daughters, Mrs. Walker and Miss Howell, and two children of Mr. Davis, were staying in a boarding house on Viger square in somewhat straightened circumstances. Mr. Lovell did everything that lay in his power for them. The two children were placed in the Convent of the Sacred Heart and he secured a furnished house for the family on City Councillors street, just above St Catherine. At this time Mrs. Davis was in Richmond, but after her husband's arrest she came to Montreal, when Mr. and Mrs. Lovell, as close friends of Mrs Howell met her, and in the course of their acquaintance in Montreal Mr. Lovell formed a very high opinion of Mrs. Davis, who was a very intellectual lady and who as he said last night, probably largely influenced her husband in his actions through life. Mrs. Davis also had with her her son, Mr. Jefferson Davis, jr., and for a while they lived at Lennoxville, where the boy went to school. He afterwards went back to the States, where he took a fever and died; he was a most promising young man and had he lived would undoubtedly have made a man of himself. When Mr. Davis was allowed out on bail, the famous Horace Greeley becoming his security, he came on to Lennoxville to see his family. When he was returning to the States he came through Montreal, and Mr. Lovell had an opportunity of meeting him. On that occasion Mr. Davis introduced Mr. Lovell to an English friend of his, when the latter remarked, "I am a great friend of Mr. Davis and I am going back with him to see him stand his trial, and the man who hurts a hair of his head will fall." His English friend, suiting the action to the world, opened his coat when four pistols were disclosed. Another interest ing incident occurred when Mr. Davis, in the course of conversation with Mr. Lovell, remarked, "Mr. Lovell, you are near enough to the States; don't get any nearer." Mr. Davis, also denied the story that he ever attempted to escape in women's clothes as absolutely without foundation. The youngest of Mrs. Howell's daughters is an author of some note in New York. Mr. Davis also paid a brief visit to Montreal subsequently, and when he came here in 1881 about his work he stopped at the St. Lawrence hall. While here after the close of the war it was noticed that he tried to be cheerful, but his face wore a very sad expression. One of his brothers-in-law, son of Mrs. Howell, was in business for a time on St. Francois Xavier street. The Rev. Dr. Balch, a Southern clergyman who heartily sympathized with the Davis family, was a very warm friend of Mrs Davis while she was in Montreal, and showed her many commendable acts of kindness. They also named among their other friends, Mr Fennings Taylor. Serious Accident.

About noon to-day as Samuel Kee, Sr., was driving a horse, with sloven attached, on to the North wharf, the whiffletree got loose and struck the horse causing it to run away. Just as the frightened animal was getting up speed the wagon collided with a loaded coal cart. Mr. Kee had fallen off the wagon and narrowly escaped being crushed by the loaded cart. He was, however, very seriously injured. Both hands were badly bruised and cut, one of them having the flesh torn off to the bone. His head was cut and his back badly hurt. Mr. Kee is a man of about 65 years of age. He was taken to his home on Brussels street in a coach, and is suffering a great deal of pain. One shaft broke and the horse got clear and ran some distance before it was captured.

Mr. Davis' Visit to Montreal.

[From the Montreal Gazette.]

The news of the death of Jefferson Davis caused a sensation among Montreal's older citizens, most of whom remember the celebrated Southern leader during his visit to this city after the close of the civil war. A reporter of the Gazette called upon Mr. John Lovell, who was the closest friend of the Davis family during their stay within our borders, and learned the following facts: It was in the fall of 1867 that Mr. Lovell first knew that Jefferson Davis' wife's family were residing in this city. At the request of the Rev. Mr. Robertson, of Toronto, Mr. Lovell called upon Mrs. Howell, mother-in-law of the Confederate President, who with her daughters, Mrs. Walker and Miss Howell, and two children of Mr. Davis, were staying in a boarding house on Viger square in somewhat straightened circumstances. Mr. Lovell did everything that lay in his power for them. The two children were placed in the Convent of the Sacred Heart and he secured a furnished house for the family on City Councillors street, just above St Catherine. At this time Mrs. Davis was in Richmond, but after her husband's arrest she came to Montreal, when Mr. and Mrs. Lovell, as close friends of Mrs Howell met her, and in the course of their acquaintance in Montreal Mr. Lovell formed a very high opinion of Mrs. Davis, who was a very intellectual lady and who as he said last night, probably largely influenced her husband in his actions through life. Mrs. Davis also had with her her son, Mr. Jefferson Davis, jr., and for a while they lived at Lennoxville, where the boy went to school. He afterwards went back to the States, where he took a fever and died; he was a most promising young man and had he lived would undoubtedly have made a man of himself. When Mr. Davis was allowed out on bail, the famous Horace Greeley becoming his security, he came on to Lennoxville to see his family. When he was returning to the States he came through Montreal, and Mr. Lovell had an opportunity of meeting him. On that occasion Mr. Davis introduced Mr. Lovell to an English friend of his, when the latter remarked, "I am a great friend of Mr. Davis and I am going back with him to see him stand his trial, and the man who hurts a hair of his head will fall." His English friend, suiting the action to the world, opened his coat when four pistols were disclosed. Another interest ing incident occurred when Mr. Davis, in the course of conversation with Mr. Lovell, remarked, "Mr. Lovell, you are near enough to the States; don't get any nearer." Mr. Davis, also denied the story that he ever attempted to escape in women's clothes as absolutely without foundation. The youngest of Mrs. Howell's daughters is an author of some note in New York. Mr. Davis also paid a brief visit to Montreal subsequently, and when he came here in 1881 about his work he stopped at the St. Lawrence hall. While here after the close of the war it was noticed that he tried to be cheerful, but his face wore a very sad expression. One of his brothers-in-law, son of Mrs. Howell, was in business for a time on St. Francois Xavier street. The Rev. Dr. Balch, a Southern clergyman who heartily sympathized with the Davis family, was a very warm friend of Mrs Davis while she was in Montreal, and showed her many commendable acts of kindness. They also named among their other friends, Mr Fennings Taylor. After having gone to the States, Mrs Howell the mother of Mrs Davis, returned to Montreal in the winter of 1868 and died in Mr Lovell's house, from whence her remains were taken across [illegible].
