Cheese Making.

On the subject of cheese making the Utica Herald quotes liberally from an address delivered in England recently by Mr Harding of Marksbury. He is recognized as good authority on the subject generally, though his opposition to the factory system, as it prevails here, is not acquiesced in. On the contrary, it is the opinion of Mr Willard, that the American factory mode of cheese making is steadily but surely supplanting that of the farm dairies in England in their own markets, giving the latter but a secondary place in them. Like all other competent authorities in dairy matters, Mr Harding gives cleanliness a leading place in his system of management. On this point he says:—"The milk, so delicate in its nature, requires to be deposited in a place entirely free from every impurity. The floor of the room should be clean and every precaution taken to render it dry." He even goes so far as to exclude the milkers from the milk room—recommending a conductor from the outside of the building to convey the milk to the cooling vat. This milk is to be kept during the night at a temperature of from 63° to 65°, to which the morning milking may be added, raising the temperature of the whole to a point suitable for the rennet. It is considered unsafe to raise the temperature much, if any above 80°, that being what is required for a successful coagulation of the milk.

Concerning what is termed poor or bad cheese, Mr Harding remarks:—"Bad cheese is sometimes made by being sour, of which there are two causes; one from the atmosphere, over which we have no control. The moment milk is drawn from the cow it commences its progress towards decomposition, and if placed in a temperature of over 65° in a close atmosphere, there is no certainty of its keeping sweet during twelve hours, and should it require to be heated at all in the morning it will increase the acidity, the presence of which in the milk does not always develop itself until too late to apply a remedy.

"Another kind of sour cheese, and which is the worst, is caused by a want of cleanliness, either in the utensils or the floors of the dairy, or it may be from effluvia arising from adjacent gutters, or heaps of manure, &c., &c., or meat hung in the neighborhood of the milk. Any of these causes will not only sour milk, but will also impart to it a bad flavor. I have occasionally detected the cause of this kind of sour cheese by the resemblance of its flavor to some adjacent stench."

In reference to a soft, soapy article, Mr H. says:—"Cheese of bad texture may generally be detected by an experienced eye as being unshapely, bulged out at the side upon which the bandages have left deep indentations, frequently sunken on the top and still soft to the touch, throwing out a thick, damp coat. There are two causes, one of which or both, have contributed to the production of such a cheese, viz: weak rennet or an insufficient quantity, or subsequent neglect. Thus, milk at 80° will require more coagulating power in a given time than milk at 90°, and if rennet too weak be employed the cheese will be cold, tender and soft, and will baffle the most skillful hand to make it into a first-class cheese. The cream will rise to the surface, and much of it pass off in the whey, injuring the quality as well as the texture, and will sooner or later acquire a rank flavor and tallowy complexion."—Rural New Yorker.

CARD.

To Friends and Strangers:

AFTER an experience of over four years in selling the NEW YORK UNION PIANO CO'S PIANOS, (made under the direction of J. P. HALE, at the Corner of 34th Avenue and 36th street, New York,) with the instruments of some of the other leading manufacturers, we have decided to drop all others and confine our sales entirely to the UNION PIANOS, being fully satisfied after having sold over EIGHT HUNDRED of these splendid Instruments in New York, Cincinnati and St. Louis, that they are the finest toned and most durable Pianos now made. They have given us and our agents less trouble than any Piano we have ever dealt in, and we would invite both dealers and customers to try them in preference to any other now made. They are superior instruments.

PHILIP PHILLIPS & CO., Music Dealers, New York, Cincinnati and St. Louis.
