THE WHOLE STORY.

Oh, yes—I'll tell you the story,
The very words that were said:
You see, the supper was cooking,
And I was slicing some bread,
And Richard came into the pantry,
His face was exceedingly red.

And he opened his half-shut fingers,
And he gave me the glimpse of a ring;
And then—oh, yes, I remember,
The kettle began to sing;
And Fanny came in with her baby,
The cunningest bit of a thing.

And the biscuit were cut in a minute—
Well, what came next? Let me see—
Oh! Fanny was there with the baby,
And we all set down to tea;
And grandma looked over her glasses
So queer at Richard and me.

But it wasn't till after milking,
That he said what he had to say.
How was it? Oh, Fanny had taken
The baby and gone away—
The funniest rogue of a fellow—
He had a new tooth that day.

We were standing under the plum-tree,
And Richard said something low,
But I was tired and flustered,
And trembled, I almost know;
For old Red is the hardest of milkers,
And Brindle so horribly slow.

And then—let me see—where was I?
Oh! the stars grew thick overhead,
And we two stood under the plum-tree
Till the chickens flew up to bed—
Well, he loves me, and we're to be married,
And that is—about what he said!

The Talking Machine.

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE LATEST EFFORT AT ARTICULATION—OTHER SIMILAR INVENTIONS, ETC.

[From the Boston Post.]

The talking machine which is daily exhibited to respectable assemblages of persons at the Horticultural Hall, can hardly be said to realize the expectations of the spectators. To the scientific and curious it is admitted to be a very ingenious mechanical recreation, but the final impression is one of regret that so much power of invention should have been wasted upon a trifle, or upon any object which can never be of the slightest practical use. It appears that many years have been spent in the study and experiments by which this automatic machine has been brought, as is imagined, to something like perfection as an imitation of the human power of speech. But after all human it is far from being a speaking, and still further from being what is understood by a talking machine. It is constructed scientifically, as well as ingeniously, and with close reference to the organs connected with speech in the human system; but there is no approximation to either the natural tones or the modulations of the human voice. The sound is produced by the method, common in musical instruments, of projecting air into pipes by a bellows, the power of articulate utterance being very imperfectly attained by the construction of these pipes in accordance with the anatomy of the throat and mouth and all the organs of articulation. It is simply a musical machine, capable of producing, without variation of tone, a limited number of vowel and consonant sounds resembling articulation, but with utterance so indistinct as that none of its words could be understood by the listeners without being previously announced by the operator. Nothing is attempted to be said by the automaton of which the hearers are not thus forewarned. The manipulation for the purpose of projecting air into the pipes for the required articulation, is similar to that of an organ. But ingenious as this androides is it is nothing new in principle, and it does not excel if it equals many other contrivances. Applying machinery to imitate life is of very ancient date. To say nothing of the pigeon of Archytas, the clock of Charlemagne, the speaking head of Roger Bacon, the fly of Regiomomianus, and other automata, the performances of which may have been exaggerated, the famous flute-player of Vaucanson is of authentic record. That really played the flute, projecting the air with its lips against the embouchure, producing the different octaves by expanding and contracting the opening, forcing more or less air in the manner of living performers, and regulating the tones by its fingers. It articulated the notes with its lips. The automaton trumpeter of Maelzel, exhibited in this country many years ago, was not less wonderful. That was made to play actually upon the trumpet, and to perform difficult music, being controlled by clock-work machinery within the figure, which was of life size. Its sound was pure and more agreeable than that which the ablest musician could produce from the instrument, because the breath gives the inside of the instrument a moisture which is prejudicial to the purity of the tone. Vaucanson also, a hundred years ago, produced a flageolet player of similarly wonderful artificial powers; and, what was the most ingenious of his comparatively useless works, an automaton duck, which dabbled in the water, swam, drank, and quacked like a real duck, successfully imitating the peculiar motions of the natural fowl. It raised its head and moved its neck, took food from the hand and swallowed it, the natural motions of the muscles of the neck being perceptible. But to what end, or what good, or to whose benefit will it tend? is the natural querry in view of such laborious and elaborate ingenuity. What place will Vaucanson, or Maelvel, or Faber hold in the estimate of posterity, as compared with Arkwright, or Whitney, or Fulton?

ALEXIS.—In Philadelphia they seduced the Grand Duke into visiting a church fair, where the bewitching ladies wheedled him out of considerable money. This is the way they boast of the achievement:—"At nearly all the tables he expended from $10 to $30. From the Green street Church table he purchased a handsome pin-cushion. At the "Ebenezer Table" he spent $20, purchasing a small toy. At the "Home" table he invested in a miniature hat, paying $10 for it. At the "Western" table he left $10. At the Arch street Church he purchased a tobacco pouch for $10. The book stand was patronised to the extent of $250. The ladies at the "Summerfield" Church table smiled upon him so effectually that he spent $20 there. Two bouquets were presented to the ladies of the Arch street Church by his Imperial Highness." Then they presented him with an Afghan (did any one ever get away from a fair without an Afghan?) and are base enough to intimate that he will take it to his chateau in Afghan-istan!! But this must have been an expensive Afghan, for one of the papers says it "is the work of an old lady whom it took six years to finish."

ANSWERED.

We sat beneath the silent stars,
And watched the sunset's embers die:
The North shot forth its glowing bars,
And crimson radiance spanned the sky.

Fair rose the moon; the darkening world
Seemed dipped in one vast silver sea:
Above the fleecy eddies curled,
The air-tides floated silently.

Upon our blighted senses sank
The spell of Peace, of Love, of Calm!
Earth-lost, our raptured spirits drank
In hallowed Nature's holiest psalm.

Dear heart! like saintly incense rise
Her soul's pure breathings home to thee:
"Thou who dost make our paradise,
Where may my heavenly dwelling be?"

And o'er her face a glory passed;
Faintly I whispered in her ear
(My long-kept secret free at last),
"If God is love, then heaven is here!"
