"LET ME GO."

I clasped her tiny hand in mine
I clasped her beauteous form;
I vowed to shield her from the wind
And from the world's cold storm.

She set her beauteous eyes on me
The tears did wildly flow,
And with her little lips she said,
"Confound you, let me go."

☞ An old minister enforced the necessity of difference of opinion by argument: "Now, if everybody had been of my opinion, they would all have wanted my old woman." One of the deacons, who sat just behind him, responded: "Yes, and if everybody was of my opinion, nobody would have her!"

☞ An old lady who had insisted on her minister's praying for rain, had her cabbages cut up by a hail storm, and on viewing the wreck, remarked, that she "never knew him to undertake anything without overdoing the matter."

☞ "So you are going to keep house?" asked an inquisitive maiden of a bride. "Yes," said she. "Going to have a girl, I suppose." "I really don't know," was the blushing reply, "whether it will be a gurl or a boy."

☞ "Do you consider lagner beer intoxicating?" "Vell, ash for dat, I gant say. I trink feefty to seexty classes a tay, end it tosh not hurt me, but I don't know how it would pe if a man vash to make a hog of hiself."

☞ A cockney at a tea-party, overhearing one lady say, "I have something for your private ear," immediately exclaimed, "I protest against that, for there is a law against privateering."

☞ A singular cave in Bainbridge County, Ga., is reported, with an orifice so small that the most diminutive explorer cannot enter it. Through this orifice a strong current of air is alternately blown out, and drawn in without any apparent cause, and regulated by no known law.

☞ Tilly, said a mother to her daughter, who had seen but five summers, "what should you do without your mother?" "I should put on every day just such a dress as I wanted," was the prompt reply.

☞ A waggish chap, whose vixen wife, by drowning, lost her precious life, called out his neighbors all around, and told them that his wife was drowned; and in spite of search, could not be found. He knew, he said, the very nook where she had tumbled in the brook; and he had dragged along the shore, above the place, a mile or more: "Above the place," the people cried, "why what d'ye mean?" The man replied, "Of course, you don't suppose I'd go and waste the time below! I've known the woman quite a spell, and know her fashions tol'ble well; alive or dead, she'd go, I know, against the current anyhow!"

☞ The iridoscope is the name for a new eye instrument. Halt a pill box perforated by a fine needle will answer. Cover the eye closely with this, and look steadily at the sky. The observer can watch his own tears streaming over the eye, note the dilation and contraction, and even see the aqueous humour poured in when the eye is fatigued with long observation. The value of the instrument lies in the fact that a person with a cataract will see only a sort of veil covering the luminous disc see by healthy eyes.

Turkey is arming with a sort of terror, as if she felt that her hour was coming. A contingent of 25,000 troops has been furnished from Egypt. The Sultan wishes to occupy the Principalities—but the Paris conference says no. The apprehension in England is that Turkey, fearing the Western Powers will accept the protection of Russia, which will open the Eastern question once more, when war would rage from the Persian Gulf to the Straits of Gibraltar. If one only knew what it was all for! Men have fought for religion, for country, for liberty, and for conquest and glory! But the causes which threaten to involve the world in war at this moment are absurdly out of proportion to the war itself.

POINTED AND RATHER DRY.—A Mr. Miller, of Ballumbie, had in his employ, amongst a number of others, one man who had, through his own folly descended from the position of a landed proprietor to that of a laborer. Mr. Miller found fault with him for some work he was doing badly. The man threw down his spade in a huff and said, 'Ye're over partickeelar, Davie Miller; I mind ye when ye had neither cow nor ewe."—"Yes," replied Mr. Miller, mildly, "Yes James, and I mind you when ye had baith."

SINGULAR REPTILE.—A Plymouth correspondent adds to the Times a most extraordinary account of a reptile which, he says, has arrived in the Young England from Australia. This importation is characterized as "a tremendous specimen of the saurian tribe, which, in the opinion of Australian savans, is more closely allied to the extinct reptilia of the pre-Adamite era than any living animal yet discovered. It inhabited the unexplored interior of Queensland, near the source of the Fitzroy River. The accounts related of the destruction caused by the monster upon the native population seemed perfectly incredible until the formidable jaws, armed with fangs of astonishing size, were beheld. Added to this, its claws of prodigious power, and its invulnerable skin, rendered it most formidable. In the contest which ended in its destruction one claw was torn off, but with this exception the body is in perfect preservation."

A MISER'S ECONOMY.—One of these strange, penurious individuals we call misers has just died in Paris. He boasted that his breakfast never cost him more than a halfpenny, and that it always consisted of bread and butter or bread and fruit. This was his economic plan:—Every morning he bought a sour roll of bread. With this he went to one of the markets, and if it was winter he began by tasting the country-women's butter. A bit of this was put in his mouth with a bit of bread previously deposited. Somehow, the butter was always bad or had some flavor he did not like. Not to be rude, he swallowed it, but made no purchase. In summer he fared more luxuriously, especially in the times of the cherries, the strawberries, the plums, and the grapes. "Have you good cherries to-day?" "How do you sell them?" "Six sous a pound." "Can I taste them?" "Certainly." He takes two or three cherries, eats them with a mouthful of bread, and says, "Hue! hue! they're a little sour," and so he passes on to the next stall. Before he got half-way down he used to breakfast perfectly. Of course, after a time the women who sold fruit and butter at the various markets began to know him, and, amused at his eccentricity, they seldom refused to let him taste their goods. He has recently died—75 years old—very rich, having never breakfasted on dry bread, or at a cost exceeding a half-penny.—Paris Letter.

THE WAY THEY MAKE BUTTER IN FRANCE.—It is well known that cream may be converted into butter by simply being buried in the ground, but it is not generally known that this mode is in common use in Normandy and some other parts of France. The process is as follows:—The cream is placed in a linen bag of moderate thickness, which is carefully secured and placed in a hole in the ground, about a foot and a-half deep; it is then covered up, and left for twenty-four or twenty-five hours. When taken out the cream is very hard, and only requires beating for a short time with a wooden mallet, after which half a glass of water is thrown upon it, which causes the buttermilk to separate from the butter. If the quantity of cream to be converted into butter is large, it is left more than twenty-five hours in the ground. In winter, when the ground is frozen, the operation is performed in a cellar, the bag being well covered up with hay. Some persons place the bag containing the cream within a second bag in order to prevent the chance of any taint from the earth. This system saves labour, and it is stated to produce a larger amount of butter than churning, and of excellent quality, and is, moreover, said never to fail.—[Journal of the Society of Arts.

The Fenians.

We have seen several letters received within the last few days, from Canadians residing in the States, all of which concur in the opinion that danger from Fenianism is not altogether past, and that so soon as we relax any of our defensive preparations, another raid will most certainly be attempted, probably upon a larger scale than before. We learn that the feeling among the Fenians towards Canada is more bitterly hostile than ever, while the fact of their having maltered some British subjects has considerably increased the sympathy felt for them by many of the United States people. It is altogether a mistake to suppose that Fenianism is at an end; at this moment the leaders are working more secretly, but as vigorously as ever, and we may rely upon it that the United States authorities will not interfere with them if they can help it. We presume that the Canadian Government is fully informed as to what is going on, and is taking the proper measures to provide for our security.—Hamilton Spectator.

To Preserve a Boquet.

An experienced florist sends us the following recipe for preserving bouquets:—"When you receive a boquet, sprinkle it lightly with cold water; then put it in a vessel containing some soapsuds, which nourish the stems and keep the flowers as good as new. Take the boquet out of the suds every morning and lay it sideways in fresh water, the stalk entering first into the watery keep it there a minute or two, then take it out and sprinkle the flowers lightly by the hand with pure water. Replace the flowers in soapsuds, and they will bloom up as fresh as when gathered, keeping good for a couple of weeks.

Prison Life of Jefferson Davis.

The last American novelty, in the way of book-making, is the publication of a volume entitled "Prison Life of Jefferson Davis," by Dr. Craven, late Surgeon of the U. S. Volunteers, and physician to the distinguished prisoner at Fortress Monroe. The book is little more than a diary of the conversations which took place between the physician and his patient. The Author relates with great minuteness the painful incidents which marked the first days of Davis' captivity. The fallen "President" felt keenly the degradation of being manacled, and struggled hard against it. He could not believe it possible that such an indignity was intended for him, and declared that he would prefer death. In five days however, the irons were, on the representation of Dr. Craven, removed. Davis was exceedingly grateful to his physician, but continued for some time in a very unhappy frame of mind. Gradually the restrictions of which he complained were relaxed, until now he seems to be allowed all the privileges and comforts consistent with his imprisonment. It is difficult to understand that there were any reasons for harshness a yearago which did not exist now; and whatever may be thought of his offence, no one can justify the cruelty which manacled a weak old man when there was not the slightest danger of his escape. Dr. Craven reports at great length the opinions of his patient upon an infinite variety of subjects. We hear that Davis still holds the doctrine of State rights, and contends for the right of secession; that he thinks himself innocent of treason because his State seceded. We get, too, his opinion of the leading characters of the rebellion. He spoke of Stonewall Jackson with something of reverence— of Lee as a great soldier and a fine Christian gentleman—and of Albert Sidney Johnston as realizing his idea of a perfect commander. Of the Northern leaders, too, Davis' opinions seemed to have been uttered quite as freely. He thinks Grant a great soldier, but of a new school. He regarded McClellan as too cautious—for his caution almost amounted to imidity—to be the commander of a great army. Mr. Davis spoke of Mr. Lincoln in kindly terms, conceding his goodness of character, honesty of purpose, desire to be faithful to his duties, freedom from avarice, and official purity. He repudiates with the utmost indignation the charge that he was a party to the assassination of Mr. Lincoln. Mr. Davis, too, finds something good to say of President Johnston, whom he knew when they were in the United States Senate together. He believes that, but for his hostility to secession, Andrew Johnson would have been made Vice President of the Southern Confederacy. Mr. Johnson was, however, of humble origin, and Mr. Davis always found that he felt ill at ease in the society of the more aristocratic Southerners who came to Washington as senators and representatives. Jefferson Davis evidently thinks much of the aristocratic classes at the South, for he is reported as arguing at considerable length for their superiority over the vulgar, money-making democracy of the North.

THE most effectual Worm Destroyer known, pleasant to the taste, and as they contain no mineral may be administered to the most delicate constitution.
Dr. Abernethy, notwithstanding his abrupt and eccentric manners, was considered one of the most skilful physicians that ever adorned the noble profession of medicine. His experience, derived from the most extensive practice in London, England together with his very superior natural talents, placed him at the head of the Faculty. It has always been difficult to form a combination with which to expel worms from the human system. Abernethy overcame this difficulty, we hope he discovered the formula from which the Vermifuge Candy is prepared. Whether worms exist or not, the Candy will at all times be found beneficial when a purgative medicine is required.
