Grain Cutting.

As recently remarked concerning the hay-field, so of the harvest-field, many farmers are too tardy in getting into it. The mistake is made of waiting until the grain is ripe, whereas experiments have repeatedly proved that to do this is to incur much risk and loss. The proper time to cut grain crops is when the berry is just out of the milk, or as soon as it is hard enough to bear moderate pressure of the thumb nail without breaking. This is usually about ten days before maturity. If harvesting be delayed until the kernels are ripe, there is loss in the weight of the grain, and much waste by its shelling out upon the ground Yields have sometimes borne a good crop with no other seeding than that received from what had been scattered during the previous harvest. A recent number of an agricultural journal gives an account of an experiment made some years ago with a crop of 50 acres of wheat. The bulk of it was cut as here recommended, and weighed 62½ lbs to the bushel. The remainder, gathered when fully ripe, gave only 58 lbs. per bushel. On the whole amount of 1,200 bushels, there was a gain of 5,400 lbs. or about 90 bushels in bulk, and the quality of flour was superior. If to this be added the waste and loss for shelling out, it will be seen that, ordinarily, far more than enough may be saved by early cutting than will pay the entire harvest expenses.—[Canada Farmer.

Crops in Europe.

A correspondent of the Index, of June 22, writes:—

It is a habit which neither warning nor experience can check to proclaim in the English press, year by year, the approach of a bountiful harvest. In your columns last week you say that the harvest in England bids fair to be unusually prolific. I believe this to be a great error. The arable land of England is divided about equally into heavy and light soils. The month of March brought with it violent east winds and frosts of extrordinary severity. April, May, and June have followed with hot days, frosty nights, and easterly winds. The effect of such weather is intelligible to every agriculturist. It means a fair prospect for the heavy soils, a perfect blight for the light soils. The facts agree with the anticipation.—Throughout the light soils of the Eastern counties, and especially on the fen lands, there will in all probability be less wheat and barley than has been known for twenty years. The present aspect of the country is most distressing, and nothing but heavy losses for the large, and ruin for the small capitalists can be expected. Let me also remind you that last winter there was a total failure of the turnip crop, and a consequent falling off in the supply of lambs both in quantity and quality. Unless we have a speedy change in the present weather, there will be a similar failure this year with even more fatal consequences. Last year there was an indifferent crop of hay. This year the hay can neither be abundant nor rich. Imports from abroad will furnish us with cereals, in spite of the misfortunes of the agriculturists, but it is possible that we may share his disasters in the failure of our supplies of mutton.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, writing June 19, says:—

Complaints are beginning to be heard from farmers of the cold dry north wind, and a consequent want of rain. From the accounts taken altogether the produce of the wheat crop will not be above that of a very ordinary year. The beans in the Allier have been partly destroyed by frost. Farmers are beginning to cut their rye in that department, being fifteen days earlier than usual. The wheat harvest is likewise expected to be early. The north wind and hot sun have been injurious to the Indian corn in the Saone and Loire. The potatoe crop in the same department promises, on the other hand, to be abundant and of excellent quality. Farmers in the Haut-Rhin complain of the deficiency in the hay crop. Old hay is selling at Mulhouse at from 9f. 50c to 10f the 100 kilogrammes; and new from 7f. 50c to 8f. The cold north wind had completely dried up the earth. The crops in the department of the Ain, which presented a flourishing appearance a fortnight since, have suffered from the north wind, which has blown continuously for the last twelve days. It is feared that the want of rain will cause the wheat to ripen prematurely.

Irish Slaves in Canada.

"Mr. McGee's praises of Canada are looked upon by the Irish people as a snare laid by the British government to entrap as many Irishmen as possible up the St. Lawrence for the mere purpose of making slaves of them."—[Toronto Mirror.

Until this moment we were not aware that the Irish "up the St. Lawrence" were slaves. We certainly thought they were free men. They do not talk like slaves, act like slaves, nor are they treated as slaves. Our experience of the Irish "up the St. Lawrence" is, that they enjoy greater liberty than their countrymen in any other part of the world; and they not only enjoy liberty, but they secure a substantial share of this world's wealth, and of all the honors attainable under the colonial government. Wherein they are slaves we cannot tell—to whome they are slaves we cannot imagine. The Mirror must be very hard up, indeed, for a sensation, when he deliberately perpetrates the monstrous assertion that the Irish "up the St Lawrence" are slaves. We think he should retract. Our cotemporary, perhaps, meant to be very sympathetic when he made his soothing announcement, but we assure him he has so entirely failed in his object, that we look upon his condolence as simply an outrageous slander.—[Prototype.

Extraordinary Case of Suspended Animation.

A most remarkable case of suspended animation has occurred in Newcastle. On Tuesday night a boy, named Batey, about 12 years of age, went to bed after partaking rather heartily of some rhubarb tart. Next morning about 6 o'clock he awake in great pain, and his farther used some simple remedies to remove the pain, but without avail, and soon after the body apparently died.—Preparations were made for the funeral, and the father went to the register office to obtain a certificate for the burial, but this the Registrar refused to give, as no medical man had seen the lad while he was ill, and there was nothing to show what had been the cause of death. The father was recommended to go to the Coroner and see if an inquest should be held; and thither he proceeded. Mr Hoyle on hearing the particulars of the death, ordered a post mortem examination to be made; and Mr W S Rayne, was however, of town; and as the case represented to be urgent—"the body would not keep this hot weather"—Mr Bush (Mr Rayne's assistant) got Dr. Carr to undertake the duty of ascertaining the cause of death. Dr Carr and Mr Bush, with their implements of dissection, and accompanied by the father of the "deceased," proceeded—two days after the lad had died—to the house of mourning, where had been left the body of the deceased lad, with all the symbols of grief around it. But conceive the astonishment of the father, when he beheld his son, who had been dead, as he thought two days, standing in the doorway, as if nothing had happened. There was nothing ghastly about him. He did not appear like one who had visited the other world, nor like one who had risen from the dead; but there he stood with the utmost unconcern, and with every sign of good health about him. The astonished parent could hardly believe his own eyes, and the doctors almost began to think they had been boaxed. The lad, however, then told his own tale. He knew nothing about his narrow escape from being buried alive. All he knew was that he had been asleep, and on awakening, as he found no one in the house—his father was looking for the doctors, and his mother was out, probably making the arrangements for the funeral—he got up, and, feeling very hungry, looked about for something to eat. Finding some eggs, he cooked them, after which he went out, in happy ignorance of his narrow escape from the grave and the surgeons knife. Mr Bush told the lad it was a good thing that he had "come to life" when he did, as if he had been but half an hour later he would probably have been killed in the attempt to ascertain why he had ceased to exist.—[Newcastle Chronicle.

Life in the Mexican Capital.

Mexico has great wealth, which is lavished in all the means of comfort and luxury know to civilized life. Houses, whose forbidding exterior of stone and plaster, with grated, prison-like windows, little indicate the elegance within, are adorned with all that art and wealth can supply, brought from Europe and the United States at fabulous expense. Costly carpets, curtains, mirrors, chandeliers, pianos, statues, paintings, libraries, works of art, and all that goes to complete a sumptuously furnished mansion, are displayed, oftener with reckless profusion than in conformity with good taste, and all suggesting to the calculating American a valuable market in our nearest neighbor, if we have the sense to keep on good terms and make our friendly relationship more intimate. The private equipages in the streets are a special means of exhibiting wealth and tast. Most of the carriges, barouches and the like vehicles, belonging to wealthy families are imported from Europe, though a few of them are made in the United States. Many of them are elaborately ornamented with silver, as is also the harness. Mules seem to be in general demand for carriage animals, though a fine span of English or American horses now and then dash along, the ribbons held by liveried coach men, while behind sits the footman in all the spendor of red, white and yellow. The principal driver are to be Pascode Barcarell, the Basco de la Viga, Alamanda. At the last named place, which is a park of about twenty acres, handsomely laid out with flowers, shrubs and large fruit trees, the fashonable world of Mexico resort for morning drives and equestrian exercise; and here may be seen the famous Mexican riders in all the grace and love of display; for nowhere does the Mexican gentleman feel so proud as on his horse, with his splendid silver-mounted saddle and gaily ornamented serape. On a fine morning a multitude of horsemen are curveting along the romantic roads of the Almeda, now half hidden among the foliage, passing out of sight behind the fountains, and wheeling into sight again, all in apparent confusion; but yet owing to their perfect control of their animals, never coming in contact. Among the crowd are seen the flashing uniforms of French and Austrian officers, trotting their heavy horses at a jogging place, holding on the reins with both hands, their elbows squared, feet pointed out at right angles from the stirrups, and presenting in all respects a ludicrous picture compared to the elegant horsemanship displayed around them. When one of these warriors (mostly effeminate-looking gentlemen, with pale faces and spectacles,) comes thumping by, the Mexicans quietly make room, and appear not to notice the contrast. Never an approach to a smile is seen beneath the ample sombrero, though doubtless the scene affords them for fun in some more fitting place, where the rules of politeness would not be violated by a hearty laugh.

Canadian Government Securities.

There has been a decided improvement in Canadian securities in the English market. The London Times of the 22nd ult., gives the following quotations:—Canada government 6 per cent., January and July, 1877 84, 97 to 99, with business done at 97½ 84; do, 6 per cent., February and August, 96 to 98; do. 6 per cent., March and September, 96 to 98; do. 5 per cent., January and July, 84 to 86; with business done at 86¼; do, 5 per cent. inscribed stock, 83 to 85.—Leader.

☞ A good story is told of a northern merchant who was eating his dinner at the Battle House, at the time of the recent explosion in Mobile. Although badly cut by the flying tragments of the windows, he managed to rush to the telegraph office, and send a message to his partner to "ship nothing but putty and glass." This duty done, he fainted, and has been in brain fever ever since.

☞ One day last month the omnibus doing duty between Paris and the suburb of Cretail arrived at the latter destination under the actual guidance of a corpse, the driver having died at an early stage of the transit. He still retained his grasp of the rein, but along the whole route a strange rigidity and oscillation of the body attracted the attention of bystanders. The vehicle with its passengers drew up at the appointed halt, when the dead man was lowered from his seat on the box, cold and stiff.

☞ The last London Punch contains a capital cartoon, representing motherly Russell and motherly Gladstone teaching their respective offspring the first step in politics.—Mamma Russell says: "Amberly Pamberly mustn't go too fast!" Mamma Gladstone: "Step out, my child, I'll take care you don't fall."

A Fiendish Act.—On Tuesday night one of the most fiendish acts that has ever come under our notice was committed on River street, in the eastern end of the city. A valuable cow belonging to Mr. Thos Davis, the brewer, was attacked in a field near his premises by some malignant miscreant, and actually ripped open and disemboweled.—Portions of the intestines were dragged out and thrown against the fence. The animal proceeded a short distance and fell down and expired. It is to be hoped a reward will be offered by the City Council for the apprehension and conviction of the perpetrator of this diabolical act.—[Leader.

Cabbage and Ditto.—"I love you like anything," said a young gardener to his sweetheart, pressing her hand. "Ditto," said she, returning the pressure. The ardent lover, who was no scholar, was sorely puzzled to understand the meaning of "ditto." The next day, being at work with his father, he said, "Father what is the meaning of ditto?" "Why," said the old man, "this here is one cabbage head, ain't it?" "Yes father."—"Well, that ere's ditto." "Drat it!" ejaculated the indignant son, "then she called me a cabbage head!"

☞ Everything can be usefully employed in some way, as is shown by the way they dispose of dead dogs in Cleveland. They are first sold to a glue factory for $1 per head. Here they are skinned, the finest skins being made up into beautiful furs and the coarser tanned and made into gloves. The bodies are thrown into great pots and boiled for a long time. The fat is then removed and sold to soap makers, etc. The bodies are also taken from the pots and the liquid boiled down and manufactured into glue.

The Effect of Marriage.—Doubtless you have remarked with satisfaction, how the little oddities of men who marry rather late in life are pruned away speedily after marriage. You have found a man who used to be shabbily dressed, with a huge shirt collar, frayed at the edges, and glaring yellow silk pocket hankerchief, broken off these things, and become a pattern of neatness. You have seen a man whose hair and whiskers were ridiculously cut, speedily become like other human beings. You have seen a man who took snuff copiously, and who generally had his breast covered with snuff, abandon the vile habit. A wife is the grand wielder of the moral pruning knife. If Johnson's wife had lived, there would have be no hoarding up of bits of orange peel; no eating and drinking with a disgusting voracity. If Oliver Goldsmith had married, he would never have worn that memorable and ridiculous coat. When ever you find a man whom you know little about, oddly dressed or talking ridiculously, or exhibiting eccentricity of manner, you may be sure that he is not a married man. For the little corners are rounded off, the little shoots are pruned away, in married men.—The wife's advices are the tiller that keeps the ship steady. They are like the wholesome, though painful shears, nipping off the little growths of self-conceit and folly.—[Frazer's Magazine.
