A STRANGE WEDDING.

[From Cassell's Magazine.]

[Concluded.]

Three days after the celebration of this strange wedding, Hopkins came to me and told me that two strangers wished to inspect the parish register. They declined to give their names, and he wanted to know if he ought to accede to their wish.

Telling the clerk that he had done right in coming to me, I accompanied him to the church, where the two strangers were waiting.

There I found a tall, well bred, but dissipated looking man, perhaps 50 years of age, and with him a stout old gentleman with a pink face and bushy white whiskers. I declined to show them the register till I knew who they were, and though they disputed my right to the information, eventually the old gentleman handed me his card from which I learned that his name was Cornelius Strange, and that he was a solicitor. This was enough for me. I bade Tompkins take down the ponderous volume and lay it on the vestry table.

The younger of the two men pounced on it, and turned with an agitation which he could not conceal to the entry of the registry of marriages.

"Done, by all—!" he exclaimed.

"Remember, sir, where you are!" I cried, sternly.

The stranger gave me a look of haughty indifference, burst into a mocking laugh, and walked out of the vestry, his companion following him.

It will readily be believed that I took an early opportunity of walking over to old Dan's cottage. I did not expect that I should find his wife there; probably, I thought, he had himself left the neighborhood. In this surmise, however, I was mistaken. The sergeant was at home, busying himself about his household affairs, and trying to look as if his marriage had never taken place.

As time went on I saw plainly, by the absence of the remarks which would otherwise have been made to me, that old Don's marriage had been kept a profound secret. Hopkins probably been bribed to hold his tongue. I held mine, as I could not perceive that talking about the ill assorted union could be of the least avail. Dan came and went as usual, but it struck me that there was an air of sadness about his face that was not there formerly. There was not about him that buoyancy, that gallant lightheartedness which had been peculiar to him. He was now in reality what he had never hitherto seemed to be—an old man. At the same time, there was not wanting signs that his material well-being was now looked after in a fashion to which he had before been a stranger.

In the course of the following summer I found the interminable dullness and absence of all life and motion, which characterized my parish to be absolutely unbearable. I therefore sought for and obtained an exchange of livings. My new charge was at Redbourne, a small town within 20 miles of London.

It was some years after I left Penbury that I had occasion to attend a court of petty sessions, held a few miles from Redbourne. As I sat in court, waiting for the case in which I was interested to be called, it struck me that the face of one of the magistrates on the bench was familiar to me. I had no very pleasant association connected with it, and yet—I have it! I silently exclaimed. "He is the friend of the lady of the mysterious wedding."

So strong was my curiosity to know the truth of that affair, that I waited until the business of the court was over, and having ascertained that the gentleman's name was Arthur Mayne, I sent him my card, and asked for an interview. On my being presented to him, I asked him if he remembered me; as he only smiled and shook his head, I recalled the facts to his remembrance, adding that if he felt at liberty, now that so long a time had elapsed, to indulge my curiosity, I should be happy to know the reasons which had prompted the unequal match, and whether in the result it had been satisfactory.

Instead of replying, Mr. Mayne hesitated, and then asked me to dine with him that evening. I promptly accepted the invitation; and in a few minutes more we were seated in his carriage, and were being carried rapidly into the country.

After a drive of three-quarters of an hour we turned into an avenue and approached a mansion of moderate size, but of charming appearance. The carriage stopped at the hall door, and as soon as I had crossed the threshold I beheld the lady who had become the wife of Old Don the pensioner. She was now a blooming matron, a baby in her arms and another infant at her skirts.

Her memory was better than Mr. Mayne's. As she recognized me she started, blushed vividly and finally turned away without speaking. My companion followed her, and then returning to me he led me into a small room near at hand, and begging me to sit down he told me the following story:

"When I was a young man," he said, "I spent a great part of my time with my uncle, who was my nearest living relative. He lived in Herefordshire, just on the Welsh border, and the house nearest to ours was Lord Roystone's place, Denham Castle. By chance I met one day in the woods, walking with a young lady whom I knew, Miss Denham, the old lord's daughter. My friend introduced me to Miss Denham, and I need only say that I strove with all my might to improve the acquaintance, for I had fallen desperately in love with her at first sight.

"I managed to meet her, and at last I confessed my passion, and had the happiness of knowing that it was returned. You can imagine the rest. In due time our meetings were discovered. Lord Roystone was furious. He called on my uncle, and gave vent to his wrath in a way which made my relative first turn his lordship out of doors and then send for me; and command me to break off all relations with the Hon. Miss Denham or leave his house at once.

"I chose the latter alternative; and really I hardly know how I lived for the next 18 months.

"Miss Denham, however, would not abandon me. Neither commands threats nor entreaties would make her promise not to see me again. The old peer was deeply incensed, and he swore a terrible oath that he would tie her down so that she could not marry me, even after his death, without becoming a pauper like myself.

"When his lordship departed this life, it was found that he had left his personal estate, which was very considerable, to his daughter, on condition that she married, within 12 months after his decease, some person other than Arthur Mayne. If she remained unmarried, or chose me for her husband, the wealth destined for her was to pass to her cousin, the new Viscount Roystone.

"You will see that it was essential for our happiness that we should not be condemned to extreme poverty—as would have been the case had we married at that time; and as I had forfeited all hopes of regaining my uncle's favor, it was absolutely necessary that we should not let Rose's fortune slip through our fingers. It seemed impossible to retain a penny of it; for the conditions were that she must marry within a few months, and must not marry me. We were literally in despair, when Rose conceived the idea which extricated us from the difficulty. She resolved to go through the ceremony of marriage within the appointed period with an aged man of humble circumstances, who would of course not require her to live with him. Such a person she knew already for she had been a great favorite with old Dan in the early days of her girlhood, when Lord Roystone lived at the Grange.

"Owing to my absurd scruples, the ceremony was postponed until the last available day, and was not only too late to save my wife's fortune. We made Don as comfortable as we could, but the devoted fellow could not rid his mind of the thought that his life stood between us and the consumation of our happiness. I have sometimes feared that the reflection helped to weaken his hold on life. He died about 15 months after that day when you married him to the lady who is now my wife. And now will you come into the drawing room?'

The mystery was solved; and I also understood that the distinguished looking stranger who came to inspect the register must have been the new peer, whose hopes of a fortune were destroyed by the celebration of that strange wedding.

—The London Lancet has contrived to get possession of a specimen of the relief bread furnished by the Russian Government to the starving peasants in the Province of Nizhni-Novgorod, and has subjected it to analysis. The result indicates the addition in round figures of not less and probably more than ten pounds of foreign substances to every hundred weight of rye flour, including woody fibre and husks, leafy matter and seeds, and containing silica and sand to the extent of more than two percent. This makes the flour heavier and also increases its bulk. The bread is described as of a dirty brown color, looking like coarse beat. Many persons to whom the sample was shown failed to recognize that it was bread at all. A Russian, writing from Nizhni-Novgorod, says: "I found in many cases that this so-called bread contained no rye flour whatever but was composed of wild arasck, potatoes chaff and leaves." Then he adds the terribly significant announcement that "within two versts of my home there are more than 130 cases of typus fever." The daily allowance of this so-called bread judged sufficient to keep the life in a healthy adult is something less than one pound.

All tobaccos except the finest Virginia have a pungent effect upon the tongue and will smart it if the smoking is long continued. Some of them will either blister it, or at least destroy its outer skin at the point where the smoke impinges upon. The Myrtle Navy is entirely free from this defect, which, together with its fine full flavor makes it a great favorite with smokers.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipe, in German, French or English, with directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail addressing with stamp, naming this paper. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Mothers, are your daughters pale or sallow? Remember that the period when they are budding into womanhood is most critical; fortify their system for the change with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, unsurpassed for the speedy cure of all troubles peculiar to females. A trial of a single box will convince you. Beware of imitations and take no substitute.

A remedy that is endorsed by Physicians must have some merit, for no Physician of any standing will place his seal of approval on a preparation unless he knows it to be good. Now Estey's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is not only endorsed by Physicians but largely used by them in their practice.

ALL SORTS.

Don't waste time, money, and health, trying every new medicine you may see advertised in the papers. If the cause of your trouble is in the blood, liver stomach, or kidneys, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla at once, and be sure of a cure. Take no other.

A morose mother is worse than a funeral next door every day of the year.

Harassing headaches make many lives miserable, needlessly so, when a prompt cure like Burdock Blood Bitters is obtainable.

There is no claim made for Ayer's Sarsparilla which cannot be endorsed by scores of testimonials. This fact plainly proves that the blood is the source of most disorders and that Ayers Sarsaparilla is the best of blood purifiers. Try it this month.

A church on wheels would save a great many people who don't like to hoof it Zionward.

THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE—Good health without pure blood is simply impossible, and to secure pure blood is therefore absolutely necessary, especially in spring when bad blood is very prevalent. Burdock Blood Bitters is the remedy, without an equal in the world of medicine. It drives out all poisonous humor of the blood from a common pimple to the worst scrofulous sore.

—A new article of fuel was utilized by the steamer "Dunedin" on her last trip from Cienfuegos, Cuba, to New York. She ran out of coal and the crew had to tear down the woodwork of the cabin and forecastle to supply the furnaces. This also being consumed, and a heavy storm prevailing, the captain ordered the firemen to shovel sugar into the furnaces. Before arriving in port fifty tons of sugar (about $2,500 worth) were burned.

Poultry.

Great Britain imported poultry in 1891 to the value of $2,229,885. As yet Canada sends but very little. It impossible to extend the trade very such. The prices for turkeys at the Smith's Falls market—probably the largest in Canada—were from 7 to 12 cents per pound in December last. The prices in Liverpool for Turkey's at the same time were from 21 to 26 cents per pound. The freight from points in Ontario to Liverpool are from 1¼ to 1½ cents per pound. Mr. Dawson, of Brampton, has made his fourteenth annual shipment to Liverpool, and the poultry arrived in good condition. A letter was read from Messrs Borthwick & Co, of Liverpool, who had introduced Canadian Turkey's into some 14 of the largest English cities. They speak in the most hopeful terms of the trade if the birds be prepared according to the directions in the Bulletin, which may be obtained upon application to the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

A Bad Cold

If not speedily relieved, may lead to serious issues. When there is difficulty of breathing, expectoration, or soreness of the throat and bronchial tubes, with a constantly irritating cough, the very best remedy is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It removes the phlegm, soothes irritation, stops coughing, and induces repose. As an emergency medicine, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral should be in every household.

"There is nothing better for coughs than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I use no other preparation."—Annie S. Butler, 169 Pond st., Providence, R. I.

"I suffered severely from bronchitis; but was

CURED BY

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It saved my life." —Geo. B. Hunter, Goose River, N. S.

"About a year ago I took the worst cold that ever a man had, followed by a terrible cough. The best medical aid was of no avail. At last I began to spit blood, when it was supposed to be all over with me. Every remedy failed, till a neighbor recommended Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took half a teaspoonful of this medicine, three times a day, regularly, and very soon began to improve. My cough left me, my sleep was undisturbed, my appetite returned, my emaciated limbs gained flesh and strength, and to-day, thanks to the Pectoral, I am a well man."—H. A.
