The Lay Of The Brave Man.

FROM THE GERMAN OF GOTTFRIED A BURGER, BY H. J. GILL, M. A., T. C. D.

Let high the lay of the brave man sound,
Like bell's loud clang and organ's tone;
Him, in whose heart true valor's found,
Reward's not good—but song alone.
Thank God! that I'm able to sing and praise
The brave man's courage for endless days.

The thaw-wind blew from southern seas,
O'er Italy rushed with baneful might;
The clouds coursed on before the breeze,
As herds run 'fore the wolves in fright.
It swept o'er the meadows and crushed the woods,
And broke up the ice on the lakes and floods.

The snow dissolved on mountains high;
A thousand torrents echoed loud,
And through the vales crashed madly by;
The rivers swelled and overflowed.
And, high in their channels, the currents strong
Bore with them great masses of ice along.

With pillars and strong arches planned,
From base to top built up of stone,
A bridge a foaming river spanned
And midway stood one house alone.
And there dwelt the toll-man with child and wife
O tol'-man! O toll-man! Now fly for life.

Fierce rushed the torrent all around;
And loudly howled the storm and flood.
The toll-man sprang from the roof to ground,
And wildly gazed from where he stood.
O merciful heaven! I cry to thee!
"All lost now! all lost now! who'll succor me?

The ice-blocks rushed their furious way
Along the banks, on either side;
From both the banks they tore away
The pillars strong and arches wide.
The terror-stricken toll-man with wife and child,
Now roared even louder than storm-wind wild.

The ice-blocks rolled and madly dashed
Along the banks, at either side;
'Gainst pillar after pillar crashed,
And sank them 'neath the foaming tide;
And quick to the centre they made their way.
"Oh! pity us, merciful heaven, we pray!"

High on the farthest shore, a crowd
Of gossips stood, both great and small;
They wrung their hands and cried aloud,
But none to rescue, 'mongst them all.
The terror-struck toll-man, with wife and child,
For succor roared louder than storm-wind wild.

When shalt thou, Lay of the Brave Man sound?
Like bell's loud clang and organ's tone;
Let him be named, let him be found!
Of him I'll sing—of him alone.
The ice 'gainst the centre will soon rush now;
Oh brave man! oh brave man! why ling'rest thou?

A count now galloped to the strand,
His fiery steed he up did pull.
What held the count high in his hand?
A purse it was well packed and full.
"I promise two hundred gold pieces bright
To him who will save them in their sad plight."

Who is the brave man? Is it he?
Show, is't the count? my brave song, show!
The count, 'fore God has bravery,
But I a braver man well know.
Oh brave man! oh brave man! why ling'rest thou?
Destruction on rushes with fury now.

"Halloo! Halloo! Your courage prove!"
Still held the count the prize on high.
They clearly heard but none would move,
for aid roared the toll-man, with wife and child,
Their voices s'en louder than storm-wind wild.

But see, by chance a peasant poor,
With staff in hand, came wandering near;
A coarse and homely blouse he wore,
His bearing noble—eye-glance clear.
Then he saw the count, and he heard his cry,
And noted how death was fast rushing by.

In God's name then he bravely jumped
Upon the nearest fishing boat;
While whirlpool, storm and fierce waves thumped,
With skill and luck, kept it afloat,
Oh pity! the boat so frail and small,
He with it at once could not save them all.

But thrice he urged it through the flood,
'Mid whirlpool, storm and shock of wave;
Three times their fury it withstood;
And thus he every soul did save.
And just as the third time he reached the bank,
The bridge's last arch in the torrent sank.

Who is, who is the brave man now?
Say on, my song, sing true and bold.
The peasant risked his life, I trow,
But was it not for the sake of gold!
For offered not the count his money good,
Perchance had the peasant not risked his blood.

"Come," cried the count, "my valiant friend,
The prize now take, 'tis here for you!"
Now say, was that not bravely meant?
'Fore God! the count thought high and true.
But higher and truer the heart did swell
That under the peasant's plain blouse did dwell.

"My life I would for gold not stake,
Content I live, though poor indeed;
Your money let the toll-man take,
'Twill help him now in his sore need."
So said he his noble and manly say;
And turned then from them and walked away.

Let high the lay of the brave man sound,
Like bell's loud clang and organ's tone;
Him, in whose heart such valor's found,
Rewards not gold—but song alone.
Thank God! that I'm able to sing and praise
The brave man's courage for endless days.

Dominion Parliament.

The Curran Bridge discussion was continued on June 19th. Mr. Martin spoke first, and was followed by Solicitor General Curran, who resumed after recess, and was followed by Messrs Tarte, Davin, Casey and Mulock, who continued the discussion till midnight to a very empty chamber. Shortly before 12 o'clock the members flocked into the chamber when it was known that the minister of justice had taken the floor. Sir C. H. Tupper began by declaring that in two days' argument no opposition member had brought forward any fact or argument which was not before the house when the subject was investigated and pronounced upon last year. A year ago the minister of railways made a full and candid statement, admitting that a fraud had been perpetrated, and explaining what steps he proposed to take No one had suggested that Hon. Mr. Haggart had failed in any particular to carry out his pledges. The proceeding proved, however, to have made a bad blunder when he said that the prosecution of St. Louis had been entrusted to only junior consul. Dealing with the contention that the mere fact of the admitted fraud having taken place was proof of ministerial culpability, Sir C. H. Tupper said that he had himself stated again and again that the fishery bounty frauds took place when he administered the fishery department. Was it, therefore, proposed to incriminate him. If, said Sir C. H. Tupper, the minister of railways is to be convicted because of the fraud in his department, I ought to go into the dock with him, and as my case precedes his, I should have long ago been imprisoned. In a powerful speech of an hour and a half, Mr. Tupper recited the history of the case and contended that Mr. Haggart had before and after the discovery of the frauds performed all that could be required of any minister in his position. Mr. McCarthy followed. Mr. McCarthy spoke for an hour, strongly supporting the want of confidence motion, and at ten minutes after two was followed by Hon. Mr. Foster. After a brief reply to Mr. Foster by Sir Richard Cartwright the members were called in at a quarter past three and a vote taken, with the following result; For Davies amendment sixty-five, against it one hundred and two. The house adjourned at three forty-five Thursdry morning.

In the house of Commons on Thursday, Hon Mr. Foster in answer to Mr. Gillis explained that the joint convention of the governments of Canada and the United States concerning purse seining and trawling outside the three-mile limit, had not reported. When the report is received it will be considered by the governments of the two countries. Hon. Mr. Haggart explained that J. D. Windsor of New Mills, N. B., was the lowest tenderer for the cedar sleepers for the P. E Island railway and had received the contract at $2.15 per thousand. A large number of bills were passed through the committee of the whole including Mr. Costigan's lobster bill, the principal clause of which changed the license fee from $10 now levied on each packer to $2 on each hundred cases packed. This change is made in the interest of the small operators. The house went into committee of supply and made good progress until recess.

The house of commons on Friday passed a number of bills and resolutions through committee, and on motion for supply Sir Richard Cartwright asked for details concerning the government guarantee of the interest on the bonds of the Atlantic and Lake Superior railway. He pointed out that though the dominion would lose nothing directly by paying the interest on the deposit made by the company with the government, still the transaction enabled the company in England to claim some sort of partnership or connection with the government. The investors might, therefore, be led to assume that the enterprise was reputable and sound and had obtained the favorable interest of the federal government. Hon Mr. Foster explained that the government had done no more than agree to pay three per cent. interest on three hundred thousand pounds deposited with the dominion by the company. The finance minister had taken care that the nature of the government's arrangement for the payment of this interest was well understood by financial circles in England. The investing public were thus thoroughly informed that the dominion government had neither part nor lot in the railway enterprise. In answer to further questions, Hon. Mr. Foster said that this guarantee was not to be regarded as a precedent. So far as he was concerned he did not propose to accept money hereafter from railway companies on these terms unless the government had first satisfied itself that the particular railway enterprise was on a sound financial basis.
