Joseph Faulder Confesses That He Tried to Influence a Juror

To Stand Out for his Brother-in-Law on Trial.

Verdict for the Plaintiffs in Noyes vs. Young—Proceedings of the Winter Assizes Before Judge Meredith.

Wednesday Afternoon.

The seventh suit for damages engaged the court's attention this afternoon and evening. James and Jane Noyes were the plaintiffs, and Seth Young was the defendant. Mr. and Mrs. Noyes live on a farm near Byron, and Young is a West Nissouri blacksmith. The parties were in the city on June 23 last, and about 4 o'clock in the afternoon Noyes and his wife prepared to go home. They got into their rig on King street, west of Richmond, and were just going to drive off when a runaway team of horses, attached to a heavy rig, ran into their wagon. The tongue of the rig struck the seat of the Noyes' wagon, and Mr. and Mrs. Noyes were thrown several feet into the air. They landed on the block pavement and the runaways trampled on both plaintiffs. Noyes and his wife were picked up for dead and carried into an adjoining hotel. It was found that Noyes had three ribs broken, severe internal injuries, and was bruised and cut about the back and shoulders. His nervous system was also shocked, and he has not yet fully recovered from the effects. Mrs. Noyes received severe bruises on her arms and shoulders and her left foot and leg. Noyes claims that the accident was caused by recklessness on the part of Young, and wants $3,000 damages. His wife asks $2,000. Young denies the charge of carelessness. He was returning from his son's house on Clarence street, and when near Richmond one of the horses took fright at a street car. A break in the rig caused the other horse to join, and then they went at a lively gait. In trying to stop his horses the lines broke, causing him to fall out of the wagon and onto the road. The collision with Noyes' rig soon followed.

PLENTY OF EVIDENCE.

A number of witnesses were examined. The court sat till 7 o'clock and then adjourned for an hour. The evidence for Noyes and his wife went principally to prove that Young had gone into Walsh's hotel on King street and left the team outside and untied.

Young stuck to his story as given above until cross-examined by counsel for Noyes, when he got tangled up. His statements at a previous examination were compared with his present evidence, and were found to differ materially. Young, however, abandoned the old evidence and stuck to the new.

NEWNES AND HIS BEER.

Thomas Newnes, of 526 Ontario street, followed Young in the box. He had a strange experience. Newnes knew Young for about 7 years and was a warm friend of his. He corroborated the defendant's version of the affair as regards the falling out of the rig.

"I was employed at the brick yards at that time," said Newnes to Mr. Chisholm. "I had been working all the night previous to the accident and came down town at 7 o'clock that morning."

Q.—You are a pretty sociable kind of a fellow, ain't you? A.—They say I am.

Q.—Where had you been just before the accident? A.—In a hotel for a glass of beer.

"And you got it," joined in Justice Meredith.

"Yes, sir," answered the witness.

"I thought so," replied the court. (Laughter.)

Q.—When did you get the first glass? A.—About 9 o'clock that morning.

Q.—What! A thirsty man like you waiting till that hour? A.—Yes, sir. (Laughter.)

Q.—How many drinks did you have from then till the accident happened? A.—Just one; I was treated by my boss.

Newnes gave other evidence regarding unimportant points, but maintained that he was sober. When leaving the box Judge Meredith called Newnes back.

"Where did you come from?"

"Hamilton."

Q.—What is your business? A.—Porter at the Grand Trunk freight sheds. I am laid off, though, owing to slackness of traffic.

Q.—That is the truth? A.—It is.

Q.—What made you

WRIGGLE IN THE BOX

so much? A.—Well, it was only the first or second time that I have been in a witness box.

"Well, I hope it will be your last," rejoined the judge, and Newnes stepped down and out.

Peter Ryckman was next called. The crowd was astonished at Peter's unsteady step, and as he drew himself into the box, Mr. Love stated that on account of Ryckman's condition he

WOULD NOT EXAMINE HIM.

Ryckman was then escorted out of the room.

George and Miss Young were also examined, and a host of doctors gave technical descriptions of the injuries received by the plaintiff.

Mr. George Powell, the King street marble dealer, saw the accident, but denied that Young's team had passed his shop. He had been standing in front of his shop and would have noticed the runaway if it had occurred.

Counsel then addressed the jury, and the court adjourned at 9:30 p.m.

Thursday Morning.

Justice Meredith began his address to the jury in the Noyes-Young case at 10 o'clock. He gave a clear review of the evidence given by both sides, and stated that if the story given by the plaintiffs was to be believed negligence on the part of Young had been clearly proven. He clearly allowed the inference to be drawn that he did not place much reliance on the evidence given by Young and other witnesses for the defense. He criticised it very severely in many respects and left the case in the hands of the jury.

The jury returned a verdict for $250—$150 for Mr. Noyes and $100 for his wife—with full costs.

FAULDER ON TRIAL.

The only criminal case on the calendar—that of the Queen against Faulder—was next taken up. Joseph N. Faulder is a McGillivray township farmer, and is accused of attempting to bribe a juryman. At the December sessions John Hodgins and Wells Sholdice and Edward Sholdice, all of McGillivray, were placed on trial for the alleged theft of about $400 worth of goods from Muir's woolen mill, in Exeter. John Mawson, of McGillivray, was a juryman, and was called on the Hodgins jury. He was challenged by the crown for a cause, and on being examined admitted that he had been approached by Faulder and offered a bribe if he would stand out for Hodgins' acquittal. Faulder was arraigned and pleaded not guilty.

Squire John B. Smyth recognized the information laid against Hodgins and the warrant for the arrest.

Sheriff Cameron was also called, merely to identify the petit jury panel chosen for the session.

MAWSON IN THE BOX.

John Mawson, the juror, was next called. He was a McGillivray man, and had known both Hodgins and Faulder for about fifteen years. On the Sunday evening before the December sessions Faulder came to his house and called him out, saying that he wanted to see witness. Mawson went outside and then Faulder asked him if, were he on the jury, he would HOLD OUT FOR HODGINS?

"I answered that I could not tell until I heard the evidence," continued Mawson, "whereupon Faulder said they had not evidence the size of a man's hand against Hodgins, and that if I held out in his favor he would make it all right."

Q.—How did he mean that he would make it all right? A.—He did not say.

Q.—No money mentioned? A.—No; nothing about the amount.

Mr. Magee endeavored to bring to Mawson's recollection a previous statement he had made.

Judge Meredith—Did you on any previous occasion say more than that?

"Well," replied Mawson, "when I was challenged at the sessions and put in the box I was all shaken to pieces, and, I believe, stated that Faulder promised to pay me."

FAULDER'S CONFESSION.

James F. McFadden, county constable, was the man who arrested Faulder. He had a long conversation with the accused when on the way to the city. Faulder said he would not deny the charge. He knew he was doing wrong and that he would be punished if found out. Faulder also stated that he wanted to screen Hodgins

FOR HIS SISTER'S SAKE.

Witness' sister was Hodgins' wife. The prisoner also told McFadden that he had promised to see Mawson well paid, but not that night.

McFadden was given a rough overhauling by Mr. Meredith. He acknowledged having been on the county constabulary for twelve years. He had been dismissed once.

Q.—What for? A.—Neglect of duty.

Q.—Was it not for bringing

A MAN WITHOUT LEGS

to jail in an open carriage when the thermometer was away below zero? A.—That is what I did.

Q.—Because the cripple infringed the Scott Act? A.—Yes.

The defense sought to prove the accused's good character. Evidence was given by James Pickering, George Johnston (first deputy reeve) and Robert Patterson, of McGillivray, and H. Elber, for fourteen years deputy reeve of the township of Stephen. They had known Faulder all his life and always found him of an honest, upright character, but of a very excitable temperament.

Mr. Meredith made an appealing address to the jury, but Mr. Magee did not speak for the prosecution, as the defense set up was as to the accused's character, and no attempt was made to disprove the statements of the crown witnesses.

NOT GUILTY.

The jury in the Faulder bribery case returned a verdict of not guilty. They evidently leaned on the side of mercy.
