The Kaiser as a Mourner at Funerals, Even When He is Not Invited

(Copyright, 1912, by the Brentwood Company)

If Emperor William has forbidden the members of the House of Hohenzollern to take any official notice of the death of Prince George William of Cumberland, who was de jure, crownprince of the sovereign Duchy of Brunswick, he has acted under a great deal of provocation, it must be owned. The moment the news of the accident reached Berlin he dispatched two of his sons, Prince Eitel Frederick and Prince Oscar, to the scene of the catastrophe, and that by special train, in order that they might be enabled to bring back with them the body of the unfortunate Prince George to Berlin.

It cannot be doubted that in thus acting, the Kaiser, who is extremely good hearted, intended to send the body, with all possible royal honors, to the home of the prince's father, in Austria. All these kindly intentions were, however, suddenly stopped, by reason of the Duke of Cumberland having meanwhile sent telegraphic notification of his eldest son's death to every sovereign in Europe, with the exception of the Kaiser, himself; this, too, in spite of the emperor's own message of sympathy sent at once to the duke. Had it not been for this prohibition, there is no doubt that the House of Hohenzollern would have been worthily represented at the obsequies, if not by him in person, by the crownprince or some other of his sons, as well as by many gorgeous floral emblems.

It might as well be remembered that Crown-princess Cecile of Germany is the sister-in-law of the Grandduchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, a daughter of the Duke of Cumberland, and that therefore it puts the royal house of Prussia in a singular position, to be thus at logger-heads with the Cumberlands on so sorrowful an occasion. Of course these regrettable incidents will not tend to the healing of the breach between the Duke of Cumberland and the German Emperor, who has personally made every possible advance towards a reconciliation. It is possible that it may even affect the hope of final union, which was expected to occur if the Duke of Cumberland's only remaining son, serving now in the Bavarian army, consented to become sovereign Duke of Brunswick.

The Kaiser is somewhat unfortunate, it must be admitted, in connection with royal funerals. His personal affection for some illustrious dead has repeatedly led him to attend uninvited the obsequies, much to the dismay and embarrassment of the relatives, caused by the necessity of according to him the first place.

For example, William was very fond of old King Christian of Denmark, whose kindness to him during his boyhood he had never forgotten, and wished at the time of the old monarch's death to show him the greatest possible honor, by appearing in person, and by heading the procession that followed him to the grave. So he invited himself to the ceremony, overlooking the fact that a desire had been expressed by the family that the attendance on the part of foreign royalty should be restricted only to very nearest relatives.

Of course, King Christian's successor, Frederick VIII., who died last week, could not refuse to accept the German sovereign's presence, although he knew it to be distasteful to the Danish people, and particularly so to King Frederick's sisters, the widowed Empress of Russia, and the Duchess of Cumberland. The Kaiser's attendance at the funeral was made stil more embarrassing, owing to the presence of the Duke of Cumberland at Copenhagen, since it involved their meeting and living under the same roof for a while, which had never happened before. The duke carefully avoided the Kaiser during his entire stay in the city, and when William sent to him a note, expressing a wish to see him in his apartments, the duke ignored the communication.

On the day when the monarch's body was carried to the church at Roskilde, a curious thing happened. The front row of seats having been reserved for the various sovereigns, including the Queen of England, the Empress of Russia, the King of Sweden and the Kaiser, the latter of course took his due place at King Frederick VIII's right hand.

In the second row were the children of the dead monarch, and, in the third, less important and more distant relatives. The service was about to begin, when King Frederick VIII. glanced around and found, to his immense astonishment, that the Duke of Cumberland had been placed in the third row, as if he were a mere prince of Great Britain and Ireland, instead of the de jure sovereign Duke of Brunswick, although his refusal of that throne was due to the disaffection existing between him and the House of Hohenzollern.

Without a moment's hesitation the new Danish king left his place and proceeded to the third row, grasped his brother-in-law of Cumberland affectionately by the arm, and led him to the front, where he placed him immediately on his left hand.

The Kaiser left Copenhagen the same evening and throughout the reign of King Frederick VIII. his relations with him were merely official.

At the time of the funeral of Crown prince Rudolf at Vienna, and again when the murdered Empress Elizabeth was laid to rest in the vaults of that Capuchin church where so many Hapsburgs await the day of final awakening, all foreign sovereigns and other royal personages were officially requested not to come, owing to the awful shock under which the bitterly stricken emperor, Francis Joseph, was laboring. His entourage naturally felt that, stricken as he was in each of these tragic cases, it would be taxing his strength unduly, if he had to be subjected to all the ceremony and rules incident to the arrival of visiting monarchs and royalties. But in spite of all the precautions taken, Kaiser William arrived post-haste, and insisted upon standing next to Francis Joseph, as the principal figure beside the emperor during the obsequies.

There has been probably no one in the whole world, save his grandfather, old Emperor William, to whom the Kaiser has been so deeply devoted, as to his maternal grandmother, Queen Victoria. As a matter of fact, sentiments of the most profound affection were the sole motive of his hastening to her deathbed as soon as he received the news that she had but a few days to live. Yet it cannot be denied that his presence was resented in certain high quarters, as monopolizing public attention unduly, and, certainly this time quite unconsciously, usurping the foremost place.

It is a pity, at least so his friends find it, that the extraordinary impulsiveness and quick decisions of the Kaiser, should prompt him so readily to display affection and sympathy, quite forgetting that, as German Emperor, he, "nolens-volens," occupies the centre of the stage, much to the detriment of smaller personalities perhaps, who, even at a moment grave and dolorous, do not like to part with even a little of their own plumage for the glory of anybody else.

It is said of Mr. Roosevelt, that he never attends a funeral without wishing to be the corpse. But of course this is carrying the ambition of playing a first role a little too far; and I only make use of this comparison in order to show that the suspicions directed towards the Kaiser are not of that nature, but that if he thoughtlessly goes where he has not been especially invited, it is not to crush anybody by his supreme grandeur, but simply to show how great a part he takes in the sorrow of others.

Daily Hints For the Cook

STRAWBERRY CAKES.

Cream one-fourth cup of butter, add gradually one cup of granulated sugar and the beaten yolks of two eggs and beat until very light. Sift one and one half cups of flour with two teaspoons of baking powder and add alternately with one half cup of water, fold in the stiffly beaten whites and bake in small, deep, round tins. When cold, scoop out the centers, fill with crushed and sweetened berries, cover with meringue and brown lightly in the oven.

CREAMED NEW POTATOES.

An excellent way to cook new potatoes is to wash and scrape clean, then drop into boiling water and cook rapidly until tender. Have ready cream and butter, hot, but not boiling, drain the potatoes, sprinkle with salt and transfer to a hot vegetable dish. Pour over them the hot cream, sprinkle with a little minced parsley and serve.

FANCY BISCUITS.

Two cups flour, four teaspoons baking-powder, one half teaspoon salt, two tablespoons sugar, two tablespoons butter, two thirds cup milk. Mix and roll one fourth inch thick, brush with melted butter and sprinkle with washed currants, chopped citron and pinch of cinnamon. Roll like jelly roll and cut off pieces about three fourths inch thick. Bake in hot oven about fifteen or twenty minutes.

Bringing Up Children by the Pendulum

By RUTH CAMERON

A FATHER who was undoubtedly spoiling his children by the lavishness with which he anticipated their every desire, was warned by a friend that he was being unkind in his effort to be very kind.

"Well, you see," he answered, "when I was a boy, my father was very close with me, and I was always being left out of things because I didn't have the money, although he had plenty. I made up my mind that if I ever had any children, they should have everything that money could buy if I could possibly get it for them."

With an air of evident pride, and an obvious belief that he had justified himself, this foolish man made this foolish explanation. And yet, as a business man, he has a great reputation for keenness and far-sightedness.

Without doubt there are more children spoiled by the pendulum method than any other way.

What do I mean by the pendulum method? Why, just what this man was doing; fleeing from one extreme of child training to another.

"I am the product of my grandmother's belief in training girls to be good housewives, whether they liked it or not," says a woman who is singularly helpless in regard to simplest housework. "She was so strict and severe with my mother that mother said we should never be forced to do anything about the house. And behold me! I can tell you my daughted is going to be a good housewife if she doesn't learn her A. B. C's."

You see, even while she fulminated against the pendulum method, this woman pledged herself to carry it on.

Another woman, whose brain has been developed at the expense of her body, declares that she is determined to have her children make the best of their bodies and let their brains take care of themselves.

A man, whose mother enforced strict chure attendance upon him al lthrough his minority, says that he will never even ask his boys to go inside a church.

And so it goes. Because we have suffered from one extreme we must make our children suffer from the other.

Take it home. You mean to be the best father or mother that ever lived, but is your zeal eating up your discretion? Are you bringing your children up by the pendulum method?

THE HERPICIDE GIRL IS THANKFUL

I am always grateful for real blessings, and I know of nothing that I need to be more thankful for than Newbro's Herpicide. Thousands of ladies not only in the United States but all over the world feel the same way about it. To this wonderful scalp and hair remedy they owe their soft, long, beautiful hair.

Mary J. Terry, of Lovejoy, Ill., writes: "My hair came out until there was just a scanty cover for the scalp, I tried everything I ever heard of or read about until I finally used Herpicide. There is nothing like it. My head is now covered with new hair. I shall forever praise Herpicide."

Most hair troubles come from dandruff. Newbro's Herpicide removes this dandruff by killing the germ which causes it. It also stimulates a flow of blood which nourishes the follicles. The scalp being healthy, the hair does not come out and the new hair is allowed to grow.

There are other preparations which they say are "just as good" as Herpicide. It is not advisable to try them. Instead of doing any good they may do positive harm.

No one is ever disappointed in Newbro's Herpicide. The results are always the same, always satisfactory as is indicated by the fact that Herpicide has been sold for years and has thousands of satisfied friends. It is the only genuine, original dandruff germ destroyer. There is nothing "just as good."

One dollar size bottles are sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

Applications at good barber shops.

THE MARRIAGE CASE

Ottawa, May 27—When the court rose for the day, counsel for the promoters of the Lancaster Marriage Bill had not completed the presentation of their case, Eugene Lafleur, K. C., who followed Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, K. C., being still in the midst of his argument. The hearing will probably last a week.

The vital question involved is whether it lies within the competency of the parliament of Canada to legislate and enact a law on the subject of marriage, and for the hearing of the question the government has engaged the most prominent counsel in the country to support the promoters and to oppose them.

CHARLOTTE COUNTY TICKET

The Conservatives in Charlotte county yesterday selected their old ticket to contest the coming elections, namely: Hon. G. J. Clarke, Hon. W. C. H. Grimmer, Dr. H. I. Taylor, and S. G. Guptill.

WAS TROUBLED WITH Weakness and Palpitation OF THE HEART.

Through one cause or another a large majority of people are troubled, more or less, with some form of heart trouble.

Little attention is paid to the slight weakness of the heart, but when it starts to beat irregularly or intermittently, palpitate and throb, skip beats, beats fast for a time, then so slow as to seem almost to stop, then it causes great anxiety and alarm.

To all such sufferers Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills can and will give prompt and permanent relief.

They do this by their restorative influence on every organ and tissue of the body.

Mrs. John J. Downey, New Glasgow, N.S., writes:—"Just a few lines to let you know what your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I was troubled with weakness and palpitation of the heart, would have severe choking spells, and could scarcely lie down at all. I tried many remedies, but got none to answer my case like your Pills. I can recommend them highly to all having heart or nerve troubles."
