It is particularly requested that every member attend this meeting in order to contribute whatever they can afford to the relief of the sufferers by the dreadful scourge of yellow fever.

FINED.—The McNaughton disorderly house case was finished at the Portland Police Court before Police Magistrate Tapley, Tuesday. McNaughton was fined $50. ACCIDENT TO A HORSE.—On Tuesday evening, while the Messrs. Galagher were doing some butchering at their slaughter house, a fine horse owned by them, which had been left standing at the door attached to a waggon, ran away, breaking its legs and badly smashing the waggon. The loss to Messrs. Galagher is quite heavy, the horse alone being valued at over $100, and the damage to the waggon probably bringing their loss up to $125 or $130,—no inconsiderable amount in these day of financial depression and hard times.—Yesterday the Messrs. Gallagher gave the animal for the asking to a party who said he would see if it could be kept alive and made of any service.—Moncton Times.

COWARDLY BLOW.—On Friday evening last, about 9 o'clock, Policman Wilcox, while trying to make an arrest on Water St., in front of Bowser's Hotel, was struck on the head by a missile thrown by some cowardly hand, and received so severe a blow as to render him insensible for a few minutes. Although there were a number of bystanders at the time not one went to the policeman's assistance when he was struck down, but he was allowed to lie where he fell until he regained consciousness and was able to help himself. When he rose he still felt the effects of the blow, which had not entirely disappeared the next day.—Advance.

Wilcox has sent in his resignation.

AFFRAY.—A News correspondent from Prince William York Co. says:

"A few days ago an affray took place at Kitchen Settlement which came near being attended with serious results. An animal belonging to Mr. Isaac Nevers broke into the field of a neighbour, Mr. Barnet, and as Mr. Nevers went to drive it out he was attacked by Mr. Barnet, who, with an axe, delt Mr. Nevers a couple of severe blows on the head, making ugly wounds. Nevers then attempted to run, and was followed by Barnet, who threw the axe at Nevers, striking him this time in the back and inflicting severe wounds. Dr. Mott was called as soon as possible, dressed the wounds, and at last accounts the patient was as comfortable as could be expected. No steps have been taken as yet to bring Barnet to justice for this act."

The different games, etc., were keenly contested. The slow horse race proved to be a very laughable feature of the day's sport. An animal owned by Michael Doyle obtained the first prize, $10. THE PRINCESS ALICE DISASTER

The paddle-wheel excursion steamer Princess Alice was one of the largest saloon steamers of the London Steamboat Company. She left London about 11 o'clock Tuesday morning for Gravesend and Sheerness. Many excursionists were induced by the fine weather to go for a holiday trip. The vessel left Gravesend on return soon after six in the evening, and arrived within sight of the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, about eight. The Bywell Castle was then approaching on the opposite course. The steamers were near the middle of the stream, just off the City of London Gas Works at Beckton and below North Woolwich Gardens, almost the precise spot where the fatal collision occurred between the Metis and Wentworth ten years ago. All that is known amid the maddening excitement is that the screw steamer struck the Princess Alice on the port side, near the fore-paason. A scene which has had no parallel on the river then ensued; few, very few, persons clambered on the other vessel, but nearly all pushed to the after part of the Princess Alice. As her bow subsided gradually under water, the shrieks were fearful, and nothing could be done to save life. There were a dozen or more life buoys and some boats swinging in davits, but even if they could have been got at they would have been of little service. Within five minutes the Princess Alice keeled completely over and went down. Some small boats hastened to the scene, and the Duke of Teck, another steamer belonging to the same company, which was also on the passage up river with excursionists, went to the rescue, but the river for a hundred yards was full of drowning people, screaming in anguish and praying for help, and as it was growing dark not much could be done. It is believed that not more than 150 escaped out of the 800 aboard.

The Princess Alice was a long low river steamer, built for excursions down the Thames, of which the middle and poorer classes of Londoners were very fond. She had saloons on the forward and upper decks and a passenger carrying capacity unusually large. A large proportion of the passengers were on the upper or saloon deck, and must have seen beforehand their impending doom; but those on the stern had no warning until they heard the crash and found the passengers from the forward part running to the after part.

Beyond the fact that the tide was about two hours ebb, which would enable the Princess Alice to ease and stop sooner than the screw steamer which would be borne on the tide, it is impossible to discover any of the circumstances immediately preceding the collision. Before the boats came into collision there were cries from one to the other to keep out of the way, but as usual the accident was probably due to misunderstanding or misinterpretation of the intention of the other. All rules of sailing were cast to the winds in the moment of peril, each taking a wrong course to avoid each other's blunder.

The cause of the Princess Alice disaster is believed to be that both vessels were rounding a sharp bend in the river caused by a projection of a point of land, whereon a powder magazine of the Woolwich arsenal is situated. To turn this point the Princess Alice had crossed over to the right bank and was thus out of her proper course. Her lights were properly obscured by the shadow of the powder magazine, and being much smaller and lower than the Bywell Castle, the latter was upon her before danger was perceived.
