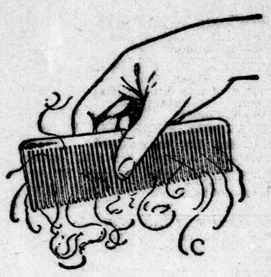
"DANDERINE" STOPS HAIR FALLING OUT

Hurry! A few cents will save your hair and double its beauty.



A little "Danderine" cools, cleanses and makes the feverish, itchy scalp soft and pliable; then this stimulating tonic penetrates to the famished hair roots, revitalizing and invigorating every hair in the head, thus stopping the hair falling out, getting thin, scraggly or fading.

After a few applications of "Danderine" you seldom find a fallen hair or a particle of dandruff, besides every hair shows more life, vigor, brightness, color and thickness.

A few cents buys a bottle of delightful "Danderine" at any drug or toilet counter.

HELENE'S MARRIED LIFE

BY MAY CHRISTIE

I.—Awaking From a Dream

I am a young grass widow. People either sneer or smile over the phrase. And yet I find it prettier than "separated woman" or "abandoned wife!"

I am not at all sure yet to which class I do belong.

Only a week since we returned from our glorious, ten-day honeymoon, Jim and I! But that one week seems like an eternity.

"Sweetheart, we'll never have a quarrel!" As we stood in the centre of my tiny London flat, our luggage all about us, Jim stooped and kissed me. No one in the world can kiss like Jim. "This is our home-coming. We're going to be tremendously happy."

"Ever and always—Amen!" I added idiotically, rather shaky from his kiss. I have never cared for anyone as I have cared for Jim. I write in the past tense now. For Jim and I have said farewell.

What was the trouble? Bad enough! Another woman—a forged check—a scene with his father—a lie to me!

Yes, he had lied to me who had adored him. And we had only been married for ten days!

I shall never trust another man again. But that won't stop me from amusing myself!

"Helene, if you won't believe me, then our contract's ended!" If I half-close my eyes, I can still visualize Jim's white, furious face as it looked down on mine the day we parted. "I swear I never signed the check—I swear I never bought the diamond bracelet for that woman——"

"And the jeweler swears you did!" My voice was hard and cold with jealously.

Then I added, passionately:

"After all, Jim, what do I know of you? Three weeks' acquaintance, ten days' honeymoon and then—the cataclysm! Oh, I've been living in a fool's paradise!" I flung away from his embrace.

"So this—this is the end, Helene?" The fury had faded from his eyes, and they were drawn with pain. "Remember, there'll be no going back——"

My lips curled in a sneer.

"No going back? What do you mean? This flat belongs to me—you are the intruder——"

A terrible urge was on me to wound his pride as he had wounded mine.

And I succeeded.

The recollection that hurts me most—and yet, in a curious, unfathomable way consoles me—is the memory of his pale, handsome face ablaze with anger and outraged pride as he swung away from me, and slammed the door of the flat behind him.

I sank down in the nearest chair, and listened to the last echo of his footsteps on the stairs.

Then silence. And I wept my heart out!

I must have cried for quite two hours. And I am not one of those heroines of romance to whom tears are becoming. Upon the contrary, when I caught sight of myself in the mirror over the mantelpiece I was no longer pretty Helene Beauclaire, the idol of the matinee girl, but a plain young woman with a swollen nose and reddened eyelids!

The sharp ting-ting of the phone bell startled me. Could it possibly be Jim, repenting of our quarrel? Was he coming back to make it up? How gladly I would welcome him, I who had no pride left—

"Hello, is that you, Helene?" The words came faintly.

I pressed the receiver close to my ear, straining to catch every sound. A man's voice spoke.

"Hello! 'tis Tony—Tony—Tony Lascelles!" My heart sank painfully. I almost hated Tony at the moment, because he wasn't Jim! "Helene, I've got the hump! This beastly London weather! Won't you come out somewhere, and cheer me up?"

Cheer him up? The irony of it! I felt as though nothing in the world would ever cheer me up again!

The awful part is that no one knows about this marriage I have made—and therefore I can confide in no one about our quarrel, Jim's and mine. The natural human instinct for sympathy—dormant in every woman—is something I must fight against and crush—I mustn't let it get the upper hand and betray me!

"Where do you want to take me, Tony?" I murmured listlessly into the telephone. If the boy only guessed that I was married—

"Rumpelmayer's for tea—at four o'clock."

Half an hour later, as we were bowling toward Piccadilly in a taxi, Tony eyed me sharply.

"Helene, where have you been in the last age? I haven't seen you for a month. I rang the flat up several times, but couldn't get an answer!"

Where had I been? In paradise!

I felt my cheeks begin to flush. The memory of my honeymoon with Jim—could anything be more wonderful?

But Tony mustn't know. No one must know.

"I was visiting friends down in the country," I said rather lamely. Perhaps the flush would escape his notice.

"And did you have a good time?"

"A—a heavenly time!" I knew that I was foolish, but I couldn't keep the words back. My eyes were shining. Tears were rather near the surface.

Tony leaned forward, staring at me curiously.

"Helene, I do believe you are in love!"

"And if I were——?" A kind of recklessness possessed me.

"Then, naturally, I'd be inconsolable," he said in a stiff, affected way. His voice did not ring true.

His statement made me think of Alice Anstruther, who is more than half in love with Tony—or who thinks she is!

Alice is my friend—or quasi-friend. A pretty, appealing, feather-headed little blonde, distinctly vampiresque—and with a husband who adores her. That type so often has! Alice is vain, and loves attention. We all do! But Alice is abnormal, in her predatory instincts. She was an enterprising little beau-snatcher at fifteen, and now at twenty-five, with a handsome country home and an adoring husband, she would grab another woman's man without a qualm, even though that woman was her own best friend.

So much for Alice.

In Tony, I may add, she has met her Waterloo!
