WANT AD TIPS

Cash and Carry Selling

Whether you are one of them or not, you know this: how enthusiastically a great many people patronize the cash and carry stores. Paying cash, contributing their time, there is sound economic reason why such buyers can buy for less. "Cash and carry," applied to various businesses, in practice has lived up to its promise. The world knows this. That is why the expression, "Cash and carry," interests and appeals to many people.

There is a special reason why "cash and carry" plans are especially fruitful in the Want Ad section. Thrifty people read the Want Ads—people keen to save money, even though they must furnish their own delivery as a part of the bargain. Want Ad readers have ready money. Show them you'll sell for a lower price in return for their cash and their automobile mileage or legwork, and they are quick to respond.

A laundry in a city where all laundries have granted cash discounts for called-for work for years, adopted the name, "Cash and carry," and ran Want Ads using it. The laundry is still running the Want Ads, extremely productive. "Cash and carry" were the magic words.

A great deal of Want Ad selling is regularly on a cash and carry basis. A flower grower sells flowers at his gardens. If he will advertise in Want Ads his "Cash and carry" plan, quoting prices, there'll be added pull in his advertising. The same holds for the beekeeper, who sells honey direct, and for numerous other farm product sellers.

"Cash and carry" expresses in a nutshell, very forcefully, the merits of certain selling methods. If you use these methods, why not use the words, too?
