"In 1912, I was taken suddenly ill with Acute Stomach Trouble and dropped in the street. I was treated by several physicians for nearly two years, and my weight dropped from 225 pounds to 160 pounds. Then several of my friends advised me to try "Fruit-a-tives". I began to improve almost with the first dose, and by using them, I recovered from the distressing Stomach Trouble—and all pain and Constipation were cured. Now I weigh 208 pounds. I cannot praise "Fruit-a-tives" enough". H. WHITMAN.

Hog Raising Is Very Profitable

THE raising of hogs has for long been one of the most profitable branches of the farming industry in Western Canada. At the present time the returns from hogs are greater than ever, while the growing shortage of meat all over the world ensures a safe and profitable market for many years to come. Nowhere are the returns safer and greater than in Western Canada, where the land is cheap, where feed crops can be raised in abundance, and where the climatic conditions are such as to reduce the risk of disease to a minimum. No class of stock brings returns more quickly to the farmer than hogs. The proficiency and the rapidity in which they grow to marketable size ensure a maximum production of meat in the shortest time. 1,500 pounds of dressed meat is a moderate estimate of what can be produced from one sow in one year.

The principal hog foods of Western Canada are alfalfa, oats, barley and wheat. Alfalfa, the king of hog fodders, is grown successfully throughout the west, especially in the irrigated areas of Southern Alberta. Oats and barley are exceptionally good crops, and produce splendid pork and bacon of excellent flavor, which always commands the top market price. For growing hogs there is no superior food than Western Canadian oats, which weigh up to 52 pounds to the bushel, and contain a large amount of meat and a comparatively small amount of hull. For fattening purposes, barley is chiefly relied upon, and there is no doubt that, apart from the weight of the hull, barley grown in Western Canada is equal in food value to corn, and produces a superior quality of meat.

A typical example of the successful hog breeder of Western Canada is F. H. Wieneke, of Stony Mountain, Manitoba. Mr. Wieneke has been associated with hog raising practically since the day of his birth fifty-five years ago, in a log hut in Iowa, when hog raising was in its infancy in that part of the State. The farm on which the hut was located could then have been bought for $6 an acre, and, he says, "it is but one of hundreds of corn and livestock farms in Iowa that raise corn and sell hogs." in hog raising in Western Canada.

In the fall of 1908 he decided to come to Manitoba, because, to put it in his own words, "I thought hog raising would be more profitable there than in the more densely populated farming community of Iowa, which proved to be true."

Since locating in Manitoba he has been a regular attendant and exhibitor at the International Live Stock Show at Chicago, and has won the Grand Championship over all champions of other breeds in the brood sow classes for three years in succession. Every time he has been there he has met some of his old friends who would invariably ask him how he achieved his success in raising hogs without corn. To this question he would invariably reply "You fellows feed too much corn That is why you always have to be on the lookout for large sires to keep up the size and stamina of your herds. Our feed is the k[illegible] that produces good starchy pigs, [illegible]th plenty of ham and a deep side of bacon, which you cannot get by feeding corn." In addition to winning the Grand Championship Mr. Wieneke has also won thirty-four champion honors at twenty-four of the best shows in Western Canada.

Farmers who breed the quick maturing and easy keeping kind get their surplus on the market at about five to seven months of age, and they are invariably sold before cold weather. One of Mr. Wieneke's neighbors sold his 1916 pigs in October realizing about $20.00 each for them and he fed them but little grain in addition to good pasture and mangels. That was last year. This year the market is much better, and considerably higher prices have been realized.

Barley, shorts, bran, and mangels, with skim milk, Mr. Wieneke considers an ideal ration for growing pigs, and barley and wheat-fed, or finely ground screenings, with a few mangels, make as good a finisher as can be had in any country. All these can be produced cheaply and abundantly in the Prairie Provinces. He always tries to have plenty of pasture, and finds that fall rye makes the best in the fall and early spring, but for the rest of the growing season alfalfa is the best. In 1916 he had a field of alfalfa which averaged four and a half tons to the acre, and which was cut three times. For those who have no alfalfa he recommends a mixture of barley and rye sown at different times during the summer. He also feeds chopped rye to pigs of all ages and grown hogs, varying as to the age of the animal, and finds it one of the best feeds to produce growth and muscle.

Hog raising has been making big money for many farmers in Western Canada this year. To the small farmer they are indispensable, affording him a steady income. Every week prices are rising, and a few instances of sales made by farmers in Alberta this year will be illuminating. In April last a number of farmers of Bon Accord, Alberta, clubbed together and shipped a car containing 85 hogs, weighing 17,400, on which they realized $2,563.51, after payment of freight and expenses. In June a farmer of Crossfield, Alberta, shipped a car of 84 hogs to Calgary. Their total weight was 20,000 and the net amount realized by this farmer was $3,000. In September a Gleichen farmer shipped two cars of hogs in successive weeks, on the first of which his net receipts were $3,500, and on the second $4,039. The price of which the hogs in the latter car were sold was $19 a hundred pounds. In the same month a car load made up by a party of twelve farmers of Leduc, Alberta, and sold at Edmonton, realized $2,123.61. Another car from Sangudo, Alberta, made up by five farmers, netted the owners $1,580. The price of the hogs in these two cases was $17.50 a hundred pounds. A farmer of St. Albert, Alberta, sold 79 hogs at Edmonton in September, on which he realized $3,308.70, or an average of $42.53. The initial cost and the cost of raising them he estimated at $20, so that his product amounted to $22.53 per hog.
