Epps's Cocoa

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

JAMES EPPS & Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London England.

Founded by the Church.

The two English universities, Oxford and Cambridge, are both Catholic foundations. Oxford has five halls and twenty colleges, and all her halls and twelve of her colleges were established and endowed before Protestantism was dreamed of, and they have not now, and never have had so many students since the fatal mis-Reformation as they had before that night of spiritual darkness set in upon them. Cambridge has seventeen colleges, of which twelve were established and endowed before Luther was born, during what some called the "dark ages."

Three hundred and forty years ago the Catholic Church founded the first university on the American continent, at Lima, Peru. Two years later she established another university at Mexico. After these she established the first on this north part of North America, Laval, Can. What a wild and unreasoning set of falsifiers non-Catholic misrepresentation has bred! "Life is too short" for comments; "we rest the case," on accomplished facts "without argument."—"Sacred Heart Review."

The Catholic Church in the British Empire comprises an episcopate of great diversity as to origin and language. Besides representatives of each of the races of the British Isles, Irish, Welsh, Scottish and English, there are on the roll French, Italian, German, Portuguese, American, etc. In 1850 the hierarchy was restored in England. There are now fifteen Sees in England and Wales, one of which (Westminster) is archiepiscopal. In Scotland there are two archbishops and four bishops, the hierarchy having been restored in that country in 1878. In Ireland there are 24 bishops and 4 archbishops. In British North America, including the West Indies, there are thirty-four sees, eight of which are archiepiscopal. On the continent of Europe and adjacent insular dependencies there are three sees. In British Africa there are five sees. In British Asia, seven archiepiscopal and twenty-four episcopal sees. In Australasia there are eighteen bishops and six archbishops' sees. The total number of archbishops and bishops now holding office is 153.—Ex.

School Examination.

The examination of Donaldston School, Lot 35, took place on the 19th ult. The school officers and a large number of ratepayers were present, thus evidencing the good feeling existing between parents and teacher. The examination, which was a thorough one, was conducted by Dr. D. E. Morris assisted by Mr. C. Bagnall and the teacher Mr. Bernard McCabe. From the fact that the Dr. was some time ago head teacher of the Grammar Schools at Belfast and Souris, he possesses more than the ordinary ability of judging the high standing which this school at present represents. The pupils were examined in Reading, Arithmetic, English, Latin, Geometry Algebra etc. At the close of the examination the Dr., after tendering some encouraging words to the children, complimented the officials of the school for having secured the services of such a faithful and painstaking teacher as Mr. McCabe, to whom is due the credit of advancing the school to the honorable position which it now assumes.—Com.

Reunited After Many Years.

LOVERS OF YEARS AGO MARRIED AT THE AGES OF 72 AND 71.

Eloped at 72 and 71 years of age. That briefly tells the story of a West side romance, which in the the telling has a humorous, as well as a pathetic, side, says a New York despatch. The romance began at least 50 years ago, but it was a romance that ended in partial tragedy, and tragedy that has turned again into romance.

Fifty years ago Patrick Kelly had the proud possession of a bit of a farm, a pig or two, a sterling wife and a daughter Kittie, near the charming town of Cork, Ire. Kittie had a wooer in the person of Michael O'Brien, a sturdy young farmer living near her fathers home, and they intended to marry as soon as possible. However, the fortunes of Papa Kelly soon went to such an ebb that he and his family sold the little property and came to America to see if they could not better their fortunes. There was a tender leave-taking between the young lovers, and each swore no end of oaths to be true. Still in '45 letter writing wasn't as universal as it is in '93.

Patsey Rafferty happened to emigrate to America from a farm near Kittie Kelly's old home about this time, and he told her that Michael O'Brien was "keeping company" with pretty Maggie Houllihan. This made Kitty mad, for she didn't know that Patsey Rafferty had written home to Maggie Houllihan that Kittie was "keeping company in far off America with a young fellow from county Killarney."

At all events, Kittie swore she never would write again to Michael, and Michael swore he would never again write to Kittie. As a result Kittie became Mrs. Rafferty, and Maggie became Mrs. O'Brien.

In course of time Patrick Rafferty died, leaving a couple of pretty daughters and a son. All the family live in the big flat house at No. 304 West Tenth street. The daughters are married to James and Terrence Fitzgerald, while the son, Matthew, drives a waggon for Arnauld, Constable & Co. He is also married.

The happy family have been in the habit of trading with Joseph S. Barrett, who kept a grocery store in Tenth street. Two months ago, however, he sold out to Michael O'Brien, but the Rafferty's continued to trade there. One morning last September Mrs. James Fitzgerald discovered that there was no flour in the barrel in her flat, and so she turned to her mother, who was going out.

"Mother, will you drop into O'Brien's store—the place that used to be Barrett's—and tell them to send me a small sack of flour?" she asked.

"Certainly my dear," replied Mrs Rafferty, as she smoothed her neat cap over her iron gray hair. Mrs. Rafferty didn't look more than 50 years of age. When she got to the grocery store she found its only attendant to be a handsome elderly man, with gray beard and hair, but who didn't look so very old, as he was straight as a Georgia pine.

"A sack of flour, ma'am," he repeated when he heard Mrs. Rafferty's order. The flour was beneath a quantity of big bags, and the old man tossed them aside as if they were but chaff, though each weighed 60 pounds.

"How is that for a man of 72 years?" he queried, as he turned to Mrs. Rafferty.

"Pretty good," she responded laughingly: "you don't look it." "That's nothing: you ought to see what I could do with big weights when I was a boy on a farm near Cork."

"Near Cork," rejoined Mrs. Rafferty, "why that's my old home: you may have known my father, Patrick Kelly?"

"Patrick Kelly," shouted the elderly man, "good gracious, you must have been Kittie Kelly, then."

"Sure."

"Kittie, Kittie," continued the old man, "don't you know me? I am Mike O'Brien."

Two hours after, when the big son of the old man came into the store, he found that his father was having a splendid chat about old times with his old sweetheart, the old man being a widower.

The lovers renewed acquaintance so rapidly that the new generations began to make objections. The old people rebelled, and one Sunday afternoon recently they both went out for a walk, and when they met, quite unexpectedly of course, they called at the rectory of a church in West Twenty-third street and soon were made one.

Clippings From Exchanges.

The Catholic Citizen, in an article on "Falling away from the Faith," says:

"Here is a man who ceased to practise his religion because of a dispute regarding the location of a new church site; another, because some 'good' church man owed him money and didn't pay; another, because he disagreed with the local pastor on the school question or in politics; not preached in English. These causes and a hundred others result in disaffection from religion, and people, otherwise good, fall away. A truly Catholic spirit is something not to be gained without effort or kept without care. It is not disturbed by personal feeling; it bows to authority in matters of faith and discipline."

***

The New World, in discussing the question of a return of the Eastern, or "Greek" Churches into union with the Catholic Church, says:

"At a recent Catholic Congress of Lillie, France, a series of resolutions was adopted to aid in re-establishing the union between the Eastern and Western Churches on the common bond of the sovereignty of the Pope. The members of the Congress determined to begin a propaganda for this object, and—we quote a Roman correspondent—'to make the Westerns and Easterns understand that the diversity of rites and ecclesiastical discipline is not opposed to such union; to persuade the majority of the Eastern Church, especially that of Russia, that the moment has come for submission to the Pope.'"

The Pittsburg Catholic has the following truthful remarks about those extremely sensitive persons who, inflated with a sense of their own importance, are always afraid lest they be underrated or overlooked."

"It is only the man of narrow head and narrower heart that is quick to take offence, when on a little reflection it would be readily seen none was intended, or could possibly be thought of. God's light of charity in thought and word, falling on such a man, is like sunlight falling on a prism. It is no longer the pure white, but is shattered into colors, which he catches according to his humor. His conclusions are like the fly in the spider's web, all tangled up. Still this man may have a very kind and true heart with such misleading judgment."

The Michigan Catholic characterizes theosophy as follows:

"Theosophy is a new arrangement of an old lie. Life, it teaches, is bad. To get rid of it, is good. There are powers in the air which can be used by the occultly wise, and one may be in a dozen places at once and disappear through thick walls by using these powers. For further particulars about this sort of theory, see Marion Crawford's 'Mr. Isaacs.'

"If one does all manner of self-sacrificing things, one enters into a higher existence and is finally absorbed into the golden lotus, which is Buddha himself. If you are a true Theosophist, you put on yellow slippers, shave your head, use water very seldom for the bath, and utter only one prayer, 'O jewel in the lotus, Amen.' At last you are annihilated, and that, if you are a Theosophist, is best of all. While you are living, you have an astral body, which is better than a free pass on all the railroads, as, with it, you can go anywhere without a railway ticket and escape the baggage smasher. This feature in Theosophy commends it to the practical."

The Boston Pilot thus sums up the chief losses the Church has sustained through death during the last year:

"The year just ended will be easily memorable in the history of the Church because of the loss of so many of her most eminent sons. Among the first to go was that great churchman and statesman, Cardinal Manning; while the lamented death of the heroic Cardinal Lavigerie, the leader of the late anti-slavery crusade, is still fresh in our minds. Other noted prelates who have passed away were Cardinals Simeoni, of Rome; Howard, of England; Agostino, of Venice; Von Puecstenberg, Archbishop of Olmutz; Battaglini, Archbishop of Bologna; Mermillod, of Switzerland; Archbishops Magnasco, of Genoa, Italy; Thibaudier, of Cambrai, France; Marechal, of Bourges, France, and Smith, of Edinburgh, Scotland; Bishops Godschalk, of Hertogenbosch; Lizagvin, of Rimouski, Canada; Jacquenet, of Amiens, France; O'Rielly of Springfield Mass., and O'Mahony, titular Bishop of Eudocia and Coadjutor to Archbishop Walsh, of Toronto Canada, and the Very Rev. Anthony Anderledy, S. J., Father-General of the Society of Jesus. A great number of devoted priests and nuns have also gone to their reward. Two notable American Catholic laymen have died in the persons of John Gilmary Shea, the author and historian, and Daniel Dougherty, the distinguished lawyer and orator."

***

The San Francisco Monitor speaks as follows of the Most Rev. Archbishop of that diocese and of the present position of California:

"Archbishop Riordan, the present metropolitan, makes the work of relieving distress a personal one, especially by advocating methods for the prevention of poverty—the introduction of a noble, temperate Christian spirit among the people. His voice has frequently been heard thundering forth appeals to the commonwealth for a higher and better state of social life.

"California has passed through its initiatory period; it is now developing; developing in a commercial, agricultural, mineral and social sense. It is today one of the great States of zeal and faith of its early Catholic settlers had much to do with its making—how much we here leave the reader to judge. Certainly the first missionaries have cause to rejoice over the far reaching results of their work as they look down from their home beyond the stars."

ELLEN BARRETT, in the San Francisco Monitor, makes the following sensible and truthful remarks about mixed marriages:

"As to mixed marriages I think they are among the worst evils the Church has to contend with. I even go so far as to say that the Catholic man who willingly marries a Protestant woman, or the Catholic woman who willingly marries a Protestant man, does not appreciate or understand the spiritual ethics of the Church. Either indifference or ignorance is at the bottom of it; they do not know or they do not care that marriage is a sacrament, that Christ Himself made it one, and that the Dogma of the Church which is so admirably defined 'the correct verbal expression of the truth,' is in violent opposition to mixed marriages.

Alas! too many find out too late the wisdom of the Church. They begin to learn that human nature is a thing of depths and quicksands, and that nothing less than a supernatural energy or agency can direct and control it.

"I would not marry a man who was not a Catholic. I would be afraid to. Since the Sacraments are not only signs of grace, but causes of it, I want to feel that God's grace comes to him through the same channels that it comes to me—that in some distinct crisis he has the same Divine help and energy and strength that I have. I want to be sure that our consciences have been trained in the same school, and that he is under the same discipline and bound by the law that I am....."

***

A correspondent of the Michigan Catholic, referring to the want of good taste and good judgement in the selection of plays for orphanges at exhibitions of Catholic schools and colleges makes the tollowing sensible and pertinent remarks:

....."I beg leave to call your attention to the fact unhappily too common in some colleges, which is the habit of representing common, vulgar, low farces as a home recreation, and even at exhibitions given to the public. I found myself, on certain occasions, a reluctant and disgusted witness to scenes that even a clown in a fifth-class circus would not perform;—ragged costumes, kicking, licking, even drinking like in a tavern; and lately, as an improvement, I was given the spectacle of a young man disguised as a bear, and who had to play all the tricks of a learned bear up to lying on his back and scratching it on the ground. I wish to know what such performances have to do with education, which should elevate the soul and not lower it. At all events, a mention of the influence of the college stage upon the education, should be made at the coming Catholic Congress."
