A MODEL SAILING YACHT.

A Correspondent Tells The World of a Craft That Couldn't be Beaten.

Editor World: I noticed in some eastern papers that some of your citizens have been looking after a model for a sailing yacht, in and around New York. Permit me to say that they should look after the model and draft of a sloop, built by John Kempton, in the city of New Brunswick, New Jersey. Dimensions in part—48 feet keel, 21 feet beam, 9 inches dead rise. I had a conversation a few years since with Capt. Willett Martin, of Old Bridge, Middlesex county, N.J., in reference to yachting. He advanced the idea that during his life he had never seen a craft spread canvas which could equal or beat the little sloop Huntress. He did not believe that her match ever crossed Sandy Hook bar, which was my sentiment. I walked her deck three years, and never had her passed by any vessel under canvas between Cape Hatteras, N.C., and Montauk Point, Long Island, in heavy weather, light winds, loaded or swept hold. No coaster, pilot boat, or revenue cutter could ever touch her. I went into Sandy Hook, wind northwest by north, under three-reef mainsail, jib-handed. Ninety odd sail anchored all the way south to Long Branch. She behaved nobly. I anchored at quarantine, Staten Island. She was centre board, drew, loaded, 6 feet 2 inches. I had a charter from the United States over two years. Capt. Martin is an old yachtman, as well as myself. JAMES N. LAWRENCE,
Resident Engineer,

P.S.—The only fault in her model was a tumble or drawing in above her bends. The pattern of her was all safe a few years since. J. N. L.

Bennett Challenges Hurst.

Editor World: Hearing considerable talk after my race with Mr. Hurst last Saturday night to the effect that Mr. Hurst could have beaten me two laps more but did not choose to do so, I beg to say I will run him the same race over for $100 or $250 a side two weeks from signing articles. I will meet him at the Aquatic, 85 Yonge street, on Wednesday night between the hours of 7 and 8.
D. BENNETT.

General Notes.

Wm. O'Connor, the amateur champion Canadian sculler, is seriously ill of congestion of the lungs.

Messrs. Duck and Hicks have raised $225 to be given as a purse for a trotting race at the Humber next week.

Arrangements are being completed for a new Northwestern baseball circuit, to include Kansas City, Omaha, St. Joseph, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth.

The boats of the Shrewsbury Ice Yacht club sailed a fifteen mile race for the commodore's pennant yesterday. This ice was rough and the breeze fair. The race was won by the Grover Cleveland, with the Dreadnaught second; time 37 minutes.

The first draw for the Ontario tankard in group No. 8 played in Bowmanville between Whitby and Port Hope resulted as follows: Port Hope rink No. 1, G. F. Hall, skip, 16; No. 2, E. J. W. Burton, skip, 15: total 31. Whitby, rink No. 1, S. Ray, skip 24; No. 2, J. Tweedie, skip 23; total 47. Majority for Whitby, 16 shots.

Manager Humphries of the Toronto Baseball club returned from Port Huron yesterday with the contract signed by Jonathan Morrison, centre field, in his pocket. The Metropolitans of New York tried hard to get him, but without effect. It is more than probable that the proposed games on the Queen's birthday between the Metropolitans and the Torontos will be arranged.

The following appears in the Montreal Gazette: "SIR—You clip from the columns of a Toronto paper that Wm. Graham of England may visit Canada and meet any of the Canadian wing shots, in a match for any sum from $500 to $1000. Hurlingham or London club rules. If Mr. Graham is willing to shoot under any American rules, he will find all the accommodation he wants here. Address all communications in care of the sporting editor of the Gazette. SPORT."

A MEDICAL SCHOOL SUED.

A Janitor Wants a Year's Pay—Suit Against Stouffville.

Before Justice Rose, at the civil assizes yesterday, the cases of Simpson v. Humber Ferry company, and Merchants' Bank v. Hughes, were adjourned till the next court. Chamberlain v. Lennox was sent to the official referee. Brewer v. Trinity Medical school was an action brought by one Brewer, formerly caretaker of the school, to recover $400 the amount of a year's wages. He claimed that he was employed at first by the month and afterwards by the year, and that he was dismissed in July last without proper notice. The defence was that at the time of his discharge he was engaged monthly. The case was dismissed with costs. Long v. Stouffville is a suit brought by a Mrs. Long of Stouffville to recover from the municipality $1000 for damages alleged to have been done to her knee by a defective sidewalk. The case was unfinished when the court rose. In Grant v. McGregor, an action on a primissory note, a verdict was entered by consent for $427.

Before Chief Justice Cameron, Ardagh v. Benson, the suit entered by Chief Ardagh for an adjustment of boundary was also unfinished.

To-day's peremptory list is: Russell v. Clarkson, Prescott v. Kyle, Doty v. McInnes, International v. Lobb, Flesh v. McKeown, Ontario bank v. Walsh, Polson v. DeGeer, Friendly v. Hendry, Edminton v. Friendly.

A NEWSPAPER MAN'S LUCK.

He Borrows Five Dollars and Increases It 760 Fold.

From the Chicago Mail.

Tom Hewitt is a newspaper man who has been from Dan to Beersheba in his newspaper career of the last ten years; who has done creditable work at Philadelphia, Pittsburg, New York, Cincinnati and Chicago. He is known to nine out of ten of the city editors between this and Boston, but better known at Chicago than anywhere else. He came on to Chicago a few months ago, and went on the News as a reporter. He had a superstion that some day fortune would turn in his favor, and he wooed the fickle goddess assiduously. It was with poor luck, as a rule. Saturday week he was "broke," and he went to a sporting friend and borrowed a $5 note. He proceeded to a faro bank on Dearborn street and commenced to play for small stakes. At first his luck was indifferent. Suddenly things took a surprising turn for the better. In a short time Tom found himself with a big stack of chips in front of him. Play what he might, he didn't make a loss. Everything appeared determined to go his way. The other players looked at him in wonder and expected every moment to see the run of luck broken. All no go, however, for Tom went on winning just the same. Finally, it was proposed that he should keep the bank and play against the dealer. Nothing loth, he dealt the game and still kept on winning. To make a long story short, when he quit play he stood in a clear winner of over $3800. With his pockets bulging with greenbacks he proceeded to the office and handed in his resignation. "I never did care for the newspaper business, anyway," he said to the city editor, and then turned on his heel and retired for at least a season into private life.

The World is the best read newspaper in Toronto.

Debility.

THE PASSING REGIMENT.

A Society and Military Drama—Success at the Grand.

People who went to see the Passing Regiment, under the impression which might be inferred from the title, that the play would be merely a spectacle, were very agreeably disappointed last evening, as the glorious banner and the waving plume were quite subordinate to the other features of the piece. The Passing Regiment is really an excellent society play, full of amusing situations, and was played in a manner that was highly recommendatory of the quality of the actors. The unities in a military point were well sustained; the officers from the colonel to the subaltern were on regle in make up, and each took and acted his respective part admirably. The ladies were unexceptionally good. Miss Virginia Brooke as Telka Escoff proved herself a finished actress, and her business with the Surgeon Van Tassel, Mr. Clarence Harvey, a good and careful actor, was all that could be desired. Miss Helen Leigh as Linda, although in a minor role, showed herself possessed of no little histrionic talent. In fact the ladies in all parts, young and old, were superior, though want of space forbids noticing them individually in extenso. Mr. Henry Miller as the swell sub., who is evidently what is known as an Anglo-maniac, is, to use one of his favorite expressions, "a regular topper." The company as a whole is especially a good one, and evidently had a thorough appreciation of the merits and points of the play. A squad of the valiant Greys, who were put through their facings, was a pleasing feature in the piece, and the Highland schottische in the 4th act, danced by the swell company to the luscious pleasings of Moore's orchestra, under the glamor of the many colored lime lights, was very gracefully done and was loudly encored. The Passing Regiment will be on all week, and will doubtless draw full houses, as it did on the opening night, the military element, including many of the brigade staff, being a strong component in the audience. The play is a decided success.

A MARE AND A DOG.

Savage Fight Between the Two at Stanley, N. J.

A bulldog and a young mare belonging to George Runyon, a farmer at Stanley, N.J., became engaged in a fight in which the mare succeeded after a hard battle in killing her adversary. The two animals were stable companions, but the mare had a great dislike toward the dog and worried him in every way she could. Yesterday afternoon the mare broke her halter, and, seizing the dog with her teeth, she began to shake it viciously. The dog not liking this kind of treatment seized its enemy by the nose and then followed a terrible fight. The dog shook itself loose from the foe and sprang at it only to be kicked to the end of the barn. At last the dog succeeded in getting a grip on the mare's nose, and that was not loosened until the larger animal placed its forelegs on the body and tore itself away. The fight continued for fifteen minutes, when suddenly the dog sunk its teeth in the foreleg of the mare, and in the latter's vain efforts to reach it with its mouth the horse fell directly on its foe and crushed the life out of him. As she mare rose from the body of the dog she gave a shrill neigh and turned around and kicked the body into a shapeless mass. When Mr. Runyon was informed of the fight he went immediately to the barn and found his mare lying in its stall nearly dead from the loss of blood. The legs and neck of the brute were terribly lacerated and its nose was entirely gone. It was impossible for the animal to live, and so she was shot.

The Musin Concerts at Horticultural Hall.

The music lovers of Toronto will be given an opportunity this and to-morrow evenings of passing judgment on the great violin virtuosó M. Ovide Musin. Wherever he has appeared his reception has partaken of the nature of oration. The Boston Gazette says:

M. Musin, who made his first appearance in Boston on this occasion, proved to be a remarkably fine violinist, with a brilliant, fluent technique, perfect intonation, a pure, round and sympathetic tone, and a style marked by great chasteness of expression, musicianly taste and thorough artistic feeling. His bowing is easy, broad and firm, and his playing throughout was charming in its delicate refinement and its perfect frankness. His first contribution to the concert was Mendelssohn's concerto. He is to be warmly praised for the admirable judgment shown by him throughout in his views of the tempi. We have been so long accustomed to hear the finale rattled off as if it could not be served up too rapidly, that it was a genuine treat to have it once more played for the music's sake, rather than for the mere display of the artist's virtuosity. The whole reading was delightful. Later in the evening M. Musin played a "Caprice de Concert" of his own, a showy and brilliant but withal trivial composition, with a catching theme, which he rendered with remarkable dash and perfection of technique. The audience was stirred to its depths, and gave way to its first genuine enthusiasm of the evening, and would not be pacified until M. Musin came forward to play again. This time he performed a fantastic trifle overflowing with tricks of finger and bow, which he executed with a grace and a charm that almost made one forget the weakness and uselessness of the whole.

The supporting company is of unusual merit. Reserved plan at Suckling & Son's.

The Depression of Prices in Great Britain.

From the Economist.

A comparison of the prices of commodities now and at the beginning of the year shows that in most instances a lower level has been reached. Of thirty-five leading articles, twenty-four are cheaper than they were twelve months ago, and only eight have advanced to price. In the articles classed under the head minerals, the fall, as compared with the close of 1884, is almost unbroken, the only exceptions being steel rails, which the combination of makers have kept at the same price, and lead, which is 17s6d per ton higher. Among the raw materials for our textile manufactures silk and flax have reached higher prices, but cotton has fallen to a phenomenally low point, and wool, hemp and jute are cheaper. Most food products also stand at lower quotations, the exceptions being American wheat, potatoes and rice. And a like downward movement is exhibited by miscellaneous articles, where sugar is the only article in which any improvement is recorded. Thus to manufacturers and wholesale traders 1885 has proved another year of hope deferred. It has brought them no relief from the previous long-continued and persistent fall in prices; but, on the contrary, has accentuated the decline, and trenched still further upon the previously narrow margin of manufacturing profits.

Runaway.

—A gentleman and his lady were out driving the other day. A large black Newfoundland dog ran out and scared the horse, which ran away, upsetting the occupants out of the cutter in the ditch, bruising the gentleman very badly. The lady escaped without a scratch. She then assisted her more unfortunate companion to his feet, brushed the snow off, and said to him: Let the horse go to grass, and just step into some first-class house and buy some of Our Brave Boys or General Middleton brands of cigars and we will go right home, and you will be as right as a fiddle in half an hour, or less time.
