STRIKE INEVITABLE IN COBALT SILVER MINES

COBALT, July 22.—All indications late tonight pointed to a strike of the employees in the silver mines of this camp tomorrow as inevitable. Some of the properties, notably the Larouse, Provincial and the Penn-Canadian, closed down this afternoon, their employees being paid off when the day shift came off duty.

Efforts by the mayors and reeves of the five municipalities of the district to mediate between the managers and the men were without effect.

Secrets of Health and Happiness

Fresh Air One of the Very Real Aids to Well-Being

By DR. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG, A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins University).

DR. HIRSHBERG

Ventilation by means of an outdoor life and sunlit air assuages pain and relieves the human anatomy from various maladies. But you are like the little old man who spent his life faring far afield for hidden treasures. While he was away forty years in a vain search, he returned in rags to find that his deserted homestead was worth thousands of dollars. The city had engulfed it and made him rich.

True ventilation restores flabby, weak, tired, sick, anaemic structures by pushing out the dark, stale, carbonized, unhealthy air.

Sunlight, proper temperature and humidity are as necessary as fresh outdoor air. The proportion of these in the air is determined by instruments. Thus a scientific doctor will go to the trouble to learn if each of his patients receives proper ventilation.

The relative humidity in buildings should be at least 50 per cent. The nearer it is to the temperature of the room the more comfortable the room will be. But if the weather outside is very cold and the amount of moisture in the room is great, drops of water will collect on the window panes, making it difficult to see through the windows.

Moisture may be imparted to the air by means of humidifiers. This apparatus consists of a container which holds about a gallon of water, and which has a trough at its lower portion. The trough extends lengthwise beneath the coil of the radiator. In the trough is placed a large felt pad, which extends up between the coils. Water absorbed by the pad and evaporated by the heat of the radiator is replaced by water in the trough, which is kept filled by means of a float valve. When there is sufficient moisture in the air, an indoor temperature of 62 to 68 degrees Fahr. will be found to be comfortable.

When "Drafts" Harm.

Good effects of cold air are well known, and many persons sleep out of doors or on porches. Wherever possible, in any climate, one should sleep with the windows of his bedroom open. These should be wide open, so as to have a good circulation of air. Persons suffering from pneumonia are now treated in a room without heat, the cold air entering through open windows being one of the best remedies that can be employed for this disease. In certain cases prolonged exposure to cold, damp air may be injurious. Healthy persons, however, if well covered, will not be injured by it.

"Drafts" are only sudden changes of temperature, dangerous to robust persons when they cause a chilling of the body. Children and old persons, owing to their feeble resistance to constant changes, should not expose themselves to drafts. A "draft" may do harm to a well person if he exposes himself to it when his body is in an overheated condition. It may increase the tendency to catch cold or to have pneumonia.

When the body is hot there is a large quantity of blood in the vessels of the surface of the body. Cold air suddenly thrown upon the skin causes these vessels to contract, by which means the blood is driven inward, producing a congestion of the internal organs. It is not positively known that this internal congestion causes a person to catch cold, but it is one of the explanations that has been made to account for this condition.

Sunlight and Fresh Air.

Those who live in houses whose doors and windows are only partially opened are prone to suffer with pimples, blackheads, boils, anaemia and other disabilities of the flesh.

Streams of sunlight and air which are made to pass constantly and completely into and through all corners of rooms, sweep away or destroy poisonous gases and germs which your nose and senses could never detect.

The stream of air that is constantly passing through a well-ventilated room not only reduces the temperature, but sweeps away harmful gases resulting from the combustion of candles, coal oil and illuminating gases. It also blows out dust, bacteria and foul odors. There are sound reasons for the belief that diseases like consumption, pneumonia and colds are transmitted by contact with persons suffering with or carrying the germs of the disease, which probably are not borne for any great distance through the air. The transmission may occur when the carrier of the germ coughs, sneezes or otherwise sprays the secretion of mouth, nose or throat over the faces of persons near him in street cars, theatres or other places where persons collect in crowds.

Obviously, your hold on life will be stronger, your pains, weaknesses and many troubles will disappear more completely if you live in a well-ventilated, bright home, than if you drink a carboy of well-thought-of medicines.

Answers to Health Questions

JANE. Q—How can I reduce my weight?

A—You must not get more than eight hours' sleep out of the 24. You must keep the intestines open and active, and get daily outdoor exercise. You should reduce the amount of sugars, starches and oils which are taken into the body. Food laxatives, such as uncooked bran and green vegetables, help in the reducing process. Drink lots of water only between times, but do not drink any with your meals. You must not partake of alcoholic beverages of any kind at any time. Do not eat any bread, except gluten, and it is better to have this toasted.

To-morrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

THURSDAY, JULY 24.

Basing the judgment on the places in which the planets are posited on this day, there should be important changes and advantageous possibilities, which should present themselves on the breaking up of crystallized conditions of long standing. These opportunities will open up abruptly and from unconventional or unexpected sources, and they should be confidently embraced, though they may involve radical change with removal or journeys. The strongest of the planets, both benefic and malefic, are propitiously and powerfully operative, though there is some slight menace sounding a warning of deception, treachery or fraud. Those in employment who are undeniably deserving may expect promotion and increase of salary, and all commercial or professional engagements should prosper. It is a day to be taken advantage of.

Those whose birthday it is may count upon an active and prosperous year, with change and promotion. A child born on this day will be active, original, inventive, industrious and prosperous.

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND

ADELE GARRISON'S NEW PHASE OF

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The News That Allen Drake Told Lillian.

I looked at Allen Drake with quick concern.

"Is your news something that affects Mrs. Underwood personally?" I asked.

"Very much," he answered laconically, and my resentment began to rise again at the offhand manner in which he had asked my aid and at the same time rebuffed my apparently innocuous question.

"Tell me," he said after an interval of silence in which he appeared to be pondering some problem not worked on to his satisfaction. "Is Mr. Savarin better?"

"Decidedly," I resolved to be as laconic as he.

"Physically and mentally?"

"Mrs. Underwood has only spoken of his physical condition."

I caught the glint of an amused smile in Mr. Drake's eyes and was immediately on my guard, realizing that even while he was evidently carrying out some serious purpose in questioning me he was getting a good deal of quiet amusement out of the resentment which I had not been able to conceal, and which I believed he was deliberately trying to arouse.

"Is he going back to the Catskills soon?"

Madge Rebuffs Him.

My lips shut tightly over the answer that had almost left them at his question. Lillian had told me but a few hours ago that the artist would soon be able to go back to his beloved mountains with his devoted sister, Mrs. Cosgrove. And Mr. Drake's manner held so imperative a touch that I had almost given him the information. But I stopped myself in time.

"I am afraid you will have to go to Mrs. Underwood for that information," I said coldly. "I am not familiar with Mr. Savarin's plans."

"And if you were you would not tell them to me," commented Mr. Drake lazily. "A very proper spirit, my dear lady, one that reflects great credit upon your 'bringing up.' I suppose I really ought to beg your pardon for asking you, but on second thought I don't believe I will, for whether you believe it or not my questions were not actuated by an idle desire to make you talk."

His drawling voice with its touch of mockery made me furious not only because of his lazy, fun-making mental attitude toward me, but because he had managed to put me undeniably in the wrong. I felt suddenly childish, realized that so able a man as Allen Drake must have some reason for his questioning that was vitally important. I had realized it all the time. I acknowledged, with pitiless self-scoring, but had allowed my wounded vanity to blind me to everything else.

"Mr. Underwood is—"

Lillian's entrance with the coffee machine saved the situation for me. I was conscious that my cheeks were burning, my eyes full of humiliated wrath, and that had no words with which to reply to Mr. Drake's mocking insinuation.

"Now we won't be but a minute or two," Lillian said lightly. "I hope you children haven't been quarrelling while I've been gone."

It was the veriest commonplace—Lillian is apt to say things like that when her brain is busy with some question she is revolving—but I felt the burning flush deepen in my cheeks and was absurdly grateful to Mr. Drake when he retorted as lightly:

"We've been positively turtle-dovelish. Gee, but that coffee looks good! Show me how you make it."

He had effectually diverted Lillian's attention—any appeal to her culinary lore is sure to do that, and he kept the conversation in that direction until we had finished our coffee. Then, as if ignoring any preliminaries, he leaned forward and spoke earnestly.

"Mrs. Underwood, I have news for you. Mr. Underwood is alive, in fairly good health, and we have reason to believe is on his way to America."

FORMER KAISER HAS RESUMED HIS ROUTINE

AMERONGEN, July 22.—The former German emperor has entirely recovered from his recent indisposition, and has begun to resume his ordinary monotonous daily life. The former empress is also well.

Today's Fashion

By MME. FRANCES

Belgian Blue Linen Morning Dress Embroidered in Wool.

Wool embroidery continues to appear with insistent frequency on summer gowns, for both morning and afternoon occasions. Linen, silk and organdie are embroidered in wool in "riotous" colors. As a hat trimming, wool flowers, fruits and geometrical figures continue in high favor.

The simplicity of this morning frock of Belgian blue linen is brought in sharp contrast with the colorful wool embroidery, which trims the unusual neckline and the open sleeves. Two shades of yellow—pumpkin and lemon—are lovely against the background of blue, while a thread of black and another of white give the perfect tone values to the various shades in the embroidery.

This dress buttons down the centre front with a row of blue ball buttons made to represent a light shade of lapis lazuli. The neck is shaped to show the embroidered vestee, and this line of linen is bound with a narrow fold of the material. The belt is made of black patent leather and fastens with a silver buckle.

Writes About "Lying and Liars."

Winifred Black

She's a liar, this girl who has just written to me. A hopeless, helpless, outrageous liar — she says so herself, and he's written to ask me what to do about it.

"I've lied for years," says this woman. "I was led into it by a man who taught me to deceive my parents and my friends.

"And for years I have never told the truth about anything.

"I've tried and tried. I've even prayed about it, but all at once there I am, telling them again—the same as ever. How shall I break myself of the habit?"

I feel as if a
