My Mother's Faith

The fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere,
And, like winged spirits, here and there
The firelight shadows fluttering go.
And as the shadows round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom,
And softly from a farther room
Comes, 'Now I lay me down to sleep.'

And somehow, with that little prayer
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thought goes back to distant years
And lingers with a dear one there;
And as I hear my child's amen,
My mother's faith comes back to me—
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hands again.

Oh, for an hour in that dear place—
Oh, for the peace of that dear face—
Oh, for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet, as the shadows round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone—
Sweet magic of that treble tone
And 'Now I lay me do down to sleep!'

—Eugene Field.

Price of Sugar and Fruit.

The rise in the cost of sugar is taken by some to mean that fewer housewives will put up fruit this year. It should mean just the opposite. Fewer wives should buy expensive canned goods this year and do more of their own canning. It cannot be said that factory canned goods are not as good as home canned fruits, because, in many cases, the factory goods are better. A first class factory is as careful about the quality of tin that goes into its cans as many a housewife is to have the best plate and glassware for her table. Added to this item (which comparatively few of the public ever notice) is the care bestowed on the selection of fruits and vegetables.

Before planting time comes round the large, first-class canneries have the ground for miles around engaged. They go farther and supply the seed to the growers. In this way they are perfectly certain of a uniform standard in size, flavor and ripening season. That is why certain brands remain the same season after season. The finest equipment is used in the best factories, every sanitary rule is insisted upon and every worker is required to be in fit condition both as to health and clothing. Few private kitchens, even those of the model housewife, are so perfectly equipped and conducted as a first-class cannery.

So much is done by machinery these days, that it is literally true that hands never touch the product. This is the case with peas. The grower pulls the plants by the roots, loads them like hay, hauls them to the cannery and dumps them into a trough. Here a machine sizes them out in an almost uncanny way, separates the pods from the vines. The latter travel off to one part of the plant and are packed for ensilage. The pods are opened by machinery and also carried away. The peas go riding off on a large belt, out of the vine building into another and then begin to descend. On the way the various sizes fall through certain holes into cans which travel along, like people. At a certain place each can is filled with a weak brine, at another it receives a cover, at another is soldered and the cover driven on. At the next station the can is inspected, and if one little thing is wrong the can is removed.

After passing the inspector the great kettle is packed with fifty or more cans, and the top fastened down all by machinery, the steam turned on the peas and cooked. Hand work begins when the labels are put on and the packing begins. No one can complain of eather quality or taste in first-class goods. But such extra quality means an extra price and this the housewife can economize by doing her own canning even though sugar is dear.

The Drawback.

Recently two cooks meet along the boulevard on an afternoon off, and during the interchange of confidences that followed it developed that one of them had left what seemed a very desirable place.

'It was a very nice place,' said the party referred to in explanation, 'and I would have been fairly comfortable but for the fact that the boss was an amateur photographer.'

'An amateur photographer,' returned the other wonderingly. 'What had that to do with it?'

'Everything,' answered the first with a deep sigh. 'At the dinner-table he used to photograph the joints before they were removed to the kitchen.'

Some of the students of Blackburn College in Carlinville, Ill., have novel dormitories. Two Pullman coaches were obtained by Dr. William M. Hudson, president of the college, and 40 or 50 students have taken up their quarters in them. The scheme was planned to give relief to the congestion in the student quarters.

The penniless German nobleman was courting an American heiress. Well, is she going to buy you? asked a friend.

'Sometimes I think she is,' he replied, but sometimes I think she is only shopping.

Self-Restraint That Pays.

One of the most interesting things about the longevity tables just published by the Census Bureau is the cleverness with which they show that women live longer than men. Very likely there are hard working women who may be inclined to question the fact, and to say, as the man did about married people, 'They don't; it only seems longer.' But the figures are there to speak for themselves.

[illegible] with a girl baby's expectation of life is 51.8 years, a boy's, 49.9. At [illegible] can look forward to live 52.6 years, and the boy to live 52.6 [illegible] look forward to only 50.2 years. A little of the difference may be owing to such boyish habits as trying to see whether the ice is thick enough to bear; but that accounts for only a small part of the discrepancy.

Physicians have long known that women bear pain much better than men, and by 'better' they mean not merely with greater courage but with less injurious after effects. The scholars who prepared the longevity figures think that women also have stronger constitutions; that is, are naturally less susceptible to disease, and more resistant to it when once contracted. It is not even to that, however, that they attribute woman's longer life, but to the fact that a great majority of the men slowly poison themselves to death by over-eating and by using alcohol and tobacco.

As a rule, women are much lighter eaters than men, as any man may discover by going to a restaurant that caters chiefly to women, and trying to get a 'square' meal. But it is evident from the figures that it is the woman who is the wiser. Doubtless she eats all she needs. Over-eating with men is a relative matter. What was reasonable when they were young and had plenty of exercise is too much when age has cut the exercise in half. With woman that condition does not hold good, for there is no great difference between the amount of exercise they got in youth and the amount they get in middle life. In fact, many a woman does more hard work after she is twenty-five than before that time. With her the amount of food to which she has become accustomed is still a reasonable amount.—Youth's Companion.

A Weak Heart.

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood-forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use flood the system with rich, red, vitalizing blood. This is Nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to ensure lasting benefits.

Chinese Punishment.

Chinese law givers are not troubled with any sentimental scruples on the subject of flogging. Even a criminal condemned to death is given a preliminary thrashing instead of, as with us, being treated with sympathy and consideration until the hour of doom. Another feature of Chinese justice, so far as the lash is concerned, is its strict impartiality.

Highborn offenders are flogged as relentlessly as criminals of the lower orders. The back of many a silken robed dignitary has been scored with the leather thongs of the whips wielded by sturdy Chinese officials, whose duty it has been to lay on the lash heavily, regardless of the rank of the victim, or pain of being flogged themselves.

The Chinese legal code prescribes for many offenses so trivial that in Europe they would be quite outside the scope of the law. Not all of the enactments are enforced nowadays but we may quote two of them as quaint examples. Fifty lashes were ordered to be given to any merchant or tradesman offering for sale goods not of the quality they are represented. Or, while self glorification is discouraged by a law that any military man who raises a monument to himself for deeds of heroism which he has never performed is to receive 100 lashes.—Pearson's Weekly.

A Year Indoors.

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were unstrung, the heart bad and smothering feelings came on till I thought I would choke. Doctor's treatment failed me, so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework and have a family of ten."

'My wife gave a reception yesterday.'

'Did you attend?'

'Yes, I played a practical joke on her. I got in line when she was receiving and, before she knew it, she was smiling and saying she was glad to see me.'

Fatal Reminder.

'Do you think, my darling' he gurgled, as he buried his manly moustache in his charmer's silk soft neck, 'that your father will consent to our marriage?'

'Well, Popkins,' she replied, 'of course, papa will be sorry to lose me; still—'

'But,' interrupted the ardent one, 'I will remind him that instead of losing a daughter he will gain a son.'

A deadly pallor overspread her damask cheek.

'Clarence,' she cried 'if you really want me I implore you to say nothing so foolish. Papa has three sons living with him now, and he's extraordinary touchy on the subject.'

David Lamar, the 'Wolf of Wall Street,' New York, has gone to the United States penitentiary to serve a two years sentence for impersonating a Congressman. Among other of the 'Wolf's' many crimes was that of acting as paymaster of funds that the spy von Rintelen planned to distribute to those who aided him in carrying out unneutral acts in the United States, such as blowing up munition plants, placing explosives on British ships, blowing up bridges in Canada, and other rascalities in keeping with Boche methods and the 'Wolfs' nature.

Jones was a kind hearted butcher. One day he was going home with a block of ice in his cart, but being called to dinner he left it in his shop.

On coming into the shop after dinner he was surprised to see a small boy sitting on the ice.

'Get off! You will be frozen,' roared Jones.

The boy did not get off, so Jones shouted at him a second time.

Have you ever been a boy? was the pitiful answer.

'Why, yes,' said Jones.

'Did you have a father?

Yes, returned Jones.

Did your father have a strap? asked the boy.

Then the light of understanding came to Jones, so he replied, softly

'Stay there my lad, stay there.'

A witty young doctor, being called to attend a very pretty lady, and finding little the matter with her, humorously suggested marriage as the only cure.

'You are single, are you not?' she asked.

'Yes, madam; but doctors only prescribe remedies, they do not take them,' was the reply.

In a case before a Tennessee justice one of the lawyers made fun of the other's grammer. The justice at once rose and said, 'Mr. Perkins, if you are one of them what thinks grammer runs in this Court you're barking up the wrong tree. If I hear any more sich remarks as you have just made I'll fine you ten dollars.'

How to Win.

A young man from the country on going to a great city asked a noted editor how he could win fame and fortune and received the following reply:

First, get rid of all 'excelsior' nonsense, stay down below and let the glacier and mountain peaks take care of themselves.

Second, do your work well no matter what it is. Study your business. Make yourself master of it by putting your head and heart into it. If it is bookkeeping, then keep books in such a fashion that the Angel Gabriel will want to lend you his crown as a token of his approval. If you are a machanic, artisan or farmer be proud of yourself and the rest of the world will soon be proud of you. Nothing is needed so much in this generation as a man with skilled fingers. You may have a long pull, but the clock will strike at an unexpected hour and the opportunity—which comes to everybody in turn, but which most people miss—will present itself. Study the bulldog and when you get your teeth in a big thing let them stay there.

Third, save money. The coward runs in debt the brave man has a $5.00 surplus in his pocket. The world may laugh at you because you can't have a four-in-hand necktie. All right, let it laugh. You are your own world and the people who sneer are simply outside barbarians. When they see that $5.00 bill growing bigger they will want to shake hands with you and send you to parliament. Keep within your income and you will save yourself from skulking around the corner like a kicked dog when the dun is on your track. The handiest thing on the planet is the penny laid up for a rainy day.

Now, young sir, get rid of the nonsense that you are a genius, settle down to the conclusion that you are just an average boy and then start in. Keep yourself alert, look after your digestive apparatus, don't smoke cigarettes, get to bed early, be square-toed in all your dealings, and we will wager a cookie that at sixty you will have to look backward for those who began the race when you did. Are you ready? Then go.

The head of the house glanced at a bill from his wife's dressmaker.

'When I proposed to you less than two years ago,' he said, 'I was rather wild, and you said you considered it your duty to marry me for the purpose of making something of me, did you not?'

'Yes Henry,' answered his wife.

'Well,' he continued, 'your efforts have not been in vain. You have succeeded.'

'I'm so glad,' she said. 'What have I made of you dear?'

Once more he glanced at the bill.

'A bankrupt,' he replied with a deep sigh.

The proprietor of a little millinery shop who had voted for the winning candidate in a northern borough, admitted that he had changed sides out of compliment to the candidate's wife.

'Ah, I see,' someone said to him. 'Her flowers of eloquence converted you, eh?'

'Flowers of eloquence!' the milliner scoffed. It was the flowers in her bonnet that did the trick. She bought 'em at my shop and gave three times more for 'em than the other candidate's wife did!'

'Children,' said the Sunday school superintendent, 'this picture illustrates to-day's lesson: Lot was warned to take his wife and daughters and flee out of Sodom. Here are Lot and his daughters, with his wife just behind them, and there is Sodom in the background. Now, has any girl or boy a question before we take up the study of the lesson? Well Sadie?'

'Please, thir,' lisped the latest graduate from the infant class, 'where ith the flea?'—Harper's Monthly.
