WARNING.

I have been informed that W. S. Brown, now of Newcastle, but formerly of Red Bank, has been endeavoring to collect certain accounts due me; said accounts being contained in a set of books stolen from my establishment at Red Bank on or about the 6th August, 1878. I hereby prohibit any person from paying, compromising, or settling any portion of the said accounts with the said W. S. Brown, as he has no authority from me for so doing. It is not my intention to collect or in any way trouble the parties in reference to said accounts.

As I am continually adding to my Stock all new improvements, in Carpenter's and Machinist's Tools, and all other Goods, and for the want of space, I find it quite impossible to enumerate more than a few lines, and articles that I keep on sale. But call for inspection will satisfy the most experienced in the Hardware trade, that my stock is complete. The variety comprises every article the country requires. I have given my strictest attention to the business, and allow nothing to be out of Stock there may be a call for, together with all new improvements. My business having increased so that I can now afford to sell at a small advance on cost, purchasers will find that they can buy to better advantage here than sending abroad for what they require.

Advance" Scientific Miscellany.

M. Bouchut has found that the juice of the fig tree contains a powerful ferment capable of digesting albuminoid matters as they are digested by the juices of the stomach.

A tea plantation was established last year by Count d'Amigo upon his estates near Messina, Italy. The tea plant is said to thrive finely there, and its leaves are in no wise inferior to those of the Chinese plant.

M. Dohrn is stated to have introduced the use of the telephone in connection with his scientific explorations of the bed of the Bay of Naples. By this means the diver and the boatmen overhead are able to communicate with each other as quickly and intellibibly as can be wished.

John Duncan, a poor Scotch weaver, has presented the University of Aberdeen with his herbarium of nearly 1200 British plants, collected by him while moving about as a harvest laborer over the southern districts of Scotland and the north of England. In his extreme old age, this self-educated devotee of science is dependent on parish relief.

In an essay upon the nutritive value of fish, Prof. Atwater gives this table: Taking medium beef at 100, we have, as the food value of like weights of fish free from bone; medium beef, 100; fresh milk, 23.8; skimmed milk, 18.5; butter, 124; cheese, 155; hen's eggs, 72; codfish, fresh, 68; flounders, 65; halibut, 88; striped bass, 79; mackerel, 86; lake trout, 91; eels, 95; shad, 99; salmon, 104; salt mackerel, 111; dried codfish, 34.6.

Concerning "applied science," Prof. Huxley recently remarked: I often wish that this phrase had never been invented, for it suggests that there is a sort of scientific knowledge of direct practical use which can be studied apart from another sort of scientific knowledge which is of no practical utility, and which is termed 'pure science.' But there is no more complete fallacy than this. What people call applied science is nothing but the application of pure science to particular classes of problems."

A few months since quite a sensation was produced in the medical world by the announcement of remarkable cures of cancer by the use of Chian turpentine, a very rare and expensive drug. It appears, now, however, that the value of this article has been greatly exaggerated, and at a recent meeting of the Medical Committee of the Middlesex Hospital, London, it was resolved that no more Chian turpentine should be ordered for the treatment of cancer, as a prolonged and careful trial had shown that its results were perfectly negative.

Perfumers are aware of the curious fact that some of our sweetest and most delicately scented flowers are of no value for perfumery. For example, no process has yet been discovered by which the fragrance of sweet-brier and eglantine can be extracted and preserved, but a good imitation is produced by a compound of neroli oil with alcoholic extracts of rose pomade and of orange flowers. Lily of the valley, which is likewise unavailable to the perfumer, is well imitated by a combination of vanilla, extract of tuberose, jasmine, and otto of almonds. Lilies are little used in perfumery, their odors being too powerful.

Two African missionaries, Griffith and Hutley,—who, at Utowa, near the mouth of the Lukuga Creek, have established the first mission station on the west side of Lake Tanganyika,—lately gave the London Missionary Society some information concerning the religious notions of the Waguha. On this point a marked difference is apparent between the tribes on the opposite shores of the lake. Those on the east side have no images or idols, but on the west shore they have them in great numbers, and connect certain beliefs with them. Mr. Griffith observes that the first thing which strikes the African traveler on entering the western half of the continent is an image at the entrance of every village, besides many others inside it. The image is in imitation of the human figure, and is called Ukissi, meaning spirit.

With the single exception of Saturn, nothing in the heavens presents a greater attraction as an object of study than Jupiter and its moons. There is a peculiar fascination in watching the four little points moving in rapid succession around the parent body, passing now as dark spots across its disk, then behind and eclipsed by it. A glimpse of the moons may be had even through a good opera-glass, and in an exceptionally clear atmosphere, at a considerable elevation above the sea, they have been seen by the unaided eye, The large red spot may be seen with a five-inch telescope. The size of this spot varies somewhat in length, but is quite constant in breadth. It's average length is about 23,000 miles, by a breadth, in the widest portion, of 6,900 miles—equal in area to about three-quarters of the entire surface of the earth.

One's Birthday.

It is a marvel to me how any one, beyond the age of childhood, can regard the arrival of a birthday with pleasure, and make it the occasion of congratulations and festivities. What does the birthday say to one but "Here I am again! You are a year older, a year uglier, a year crosser, than when we last met. I have stolen from your life three hundred and sixty-five days. I have disillusioned you considerably. I have taken away several friends—either their hearts or their bodies. True, I have made you a few gifts, but all that I have given you, other years will take away, together with the remnant of your youth, your good-looks, your hope and your strength. If I come often to you—or if my successors come, which is the same thing—you will become an old man or woman—childish, perhaps, or alone in the world. If our visits cease abruptly, well—you cease too—as far as this world goes: all your little happiness, your projects, your hopes your loves—everything mortal that is you." That is a birthday.

And do you expect me to keep one? Not I. I wish no one had labeled him on his back with figures from a calendar. Then he might have come and gone without my knowledge.

As for giving him a party, or dancing because he comes, or being congratulated: Oh, not I! I've never liked him since I was fifteen. When he creeps into the room early in the morning and looks on me with a diabolical grin, and shouts his number at me, I make a face at him—little imp—and cover up my head.

Keep a birth-day, indeed! Not I. Shut the door on him; turn him out. One would say, "Never come again" but for all it involves. Give me my presents at some other time—my dearer presents, your kisses and congratulations—not on my birthday.

Advice for Weak-Sighted Persons.

Persons having a tendency to weakness of sight, or those experiencing unusual fatigue of the eyes in reading or similar occupations requiring close vision, should carefully observe the following rules:

1. Cease to use the eyes for the time being, and look away from the work, when sight becomes in the least painful, blurred, or indistinct. After perfect rest for a moment or longer, work may be resumed, to be discontinued as before when the eyes feel
