Plea of an Iowa Counsellor.

Gentlemen of the Jury—It is with feelings of no ordinary commotion that I rise to defend my client, from the attacks which have been made upon his hitherto unapproachable character. I feel that, gentlemen, although a good deal smarter than any of you are, or even the judge here, yet I am totally uncompetent to present this ere cause in the magnanimous and heart-rending light with its importance demands. And I trust, gentleman, that whatever I may lack in presenting the subject, may be immediately made up by your own good sense and discernment if you have any. The counsel for the prosecution, gentlemen, will undoubtedly endeavor to heave dust in your eyes. He will tell you that his client is a man of function—that he is a man of unimpeachable veracity—that he is a man who would scorn to fotch an action against another merely to gratify his personal corporosity—but let me entreat of you, gentlemen, to beware of how you rely upon any spacious reasoning like this. I myself apprehend that this ere suit has been wilfully and maliciously fotch gentlemen, for the sake and only purpose of brow-beating the unhappy client, and in an eminent manner, grinding the face of the poor—look into that man's heart, and read the motives which have propelled him to fatch this action, such a picter of moral turpentine and heartfelt gratitude would be brought to light as has never before been experienced since the Falls of Niagara. Now, gentlemen, I want to make a brilliant appeal to the kind sympathies of your nater, and see if I can't warp your judgements, a little in favor of my unfortunate client, and then I shall fotch my arguments to a close. Here is a poor man who has a numerous wife and family dependent on him for their bread & butter, wantonly fotched up here, and arranged before an intellectual jury, on the charge of egnominiously hooking—yes, gentlemen—mark the idea—hooking six quarts of cider. You, gentlemen, have all been placed in the same situation, and you know how to feel for the misfortunes of my heart-broken client; and I hope you will not permit the natural gushings of your sympathizing hearts to be overcome by the superstitous arguments of my ignorant opponent on the other side. The expressely declares, gentlemen, in the beautiful language of Shaksphere, that where no doubt of the guilt of the prisoner, it is your duty to lean on the side of justice, and fotch him in innocent. If you keep this view, gentlemen you will have the honour of making a friend of him and all his relations, and you can allers look back on this case, that you did as you have been done by, but if you disregard this point in law, set at naught my eloquent remarks, and fotch him in guilty, the silent twitches of conscience will follet you over every caterfield, and my injured client, gentlemen, will be pretty apt to light on you some of these dark nights as my cat lights on a saucer of new milk.

It is needless to say that the prisoner was honourably acquitted.

A Dream and its Fulfilment.

One of those strange cases which from time to time appear in the newspaper, and which is apt to confirm the belief which some persons have in dreams, has just been related to us, the names of the parties, for obvious reasons being withheld. A woman residing in Arbreath had lost a shawl and brooch of some value, these articles having been abstracted from her house. She had searched the whole house, but no trace of the missing articles could be discovered. A young woman residing in Forfar, who had been staying with her two or three days, had left on the day previous to that on which the articles were missed, no suspicion as to her having taken the things arising in the woman's mind. On the same night on which the young woman left for Forfar, she dreamed that she saw her place and her shawl around another woman's shoulders. On awakening in the morning, and remembering what she had dreamt, nothing would satisfy her but that she should come to Forfar and see after her missing property. Despite the ridicule of friends she took the first train, and, on arriving in Forfar, called on the young woman. How great was her astonishment, on entering the young woman's residence, and discovering her in the very act of putting the missing shawl around woman's shoulders in the manner as she seen in her dream. The utter astonishment and confusion of the young woman may easily be conceived as she beheld the real owner of the shawl. The woman, on claiming her property, said they would easily know what she had came for. The woman was perfectly staggered when she found the dream came true.—[Northern Warder.

A New way to play the Piano.

Among the many anecdotes preserved to us of the incomparable Mozart showing the love of fun which distinguished him before he lost his health, is one which tells how, one day when he and Hadyn were dining out in company, Mozart, who was very fond of champagne, suddenly addressed himself to Hadyn, offering to bet six bottles of champagne that he would compose a piece that Hadyn could not play at first sight. 'Done,' cried Hadyn. Mozart went off at once to a writing table, dashed off a composition and gave it to Hadyn. The latter left the dinner table, and sat down to the piano, amazed at the felicity of Mozart's genious, but laughingly exclaiming, 'Mozart has more cash than he can digest, and is bent on disbursing the champagne!'

'We shall see what we shall see!' cried Mozart, gleefully rubbing his hands.

Hadyn went on swimmingly, with the music, for a few minutes; then suddenly stopped. 'How on earth am I to plap that?' he exclaimed in evident perplexity 'my two hands are occupied at the two ends of the piano, and here's a note right in the middle of the key board.'

'Are you stopped by such a trifle?' replied Mozart; 'just let me show you!' And sitting down to the piano, he ran through the first part, and when he came to the famous note, struck it by giving the key a tap with his nose, going rapidly on and finishing the piece amidst roars of laughter from the rest of the party. Mozart's nose was very long; Hadyn's was very short; a disparity that, no doubt, suggested the merry joke which cost Hadyn the six bottels of champagne he had so confidently counted on winning from Mozart.

A Weighty Subject:—Statistics show that a baby, on the first day of his or her appearance in public, weighs about 6½ lbs., a boy a little more, a girl a little less. Some babies hardly turn the scale with two and a half pounds, while others weigh a dozen pounds. Girls and boys of 12 years of age are nearly equal in weight; after which limit males are much heavier than females of the of the same age. Young men of the age of 20 years average 120 pounds. Men reach their heaviest bulk at about 35, when their average weight is 152 lbs; but the women slowly fatten until 50, when their average is 129 lbs. Taking men and women together, their weight at full growth averages 140 lbs. Full grown men and woman are about twenty times as heavy as they were on the first day of their existance. Of course averages are here only meant. The averages were formed from men ranging from 180 to 220 lbs., and women from 88 to 207 lbs. Taking all ages, and both sexes, the average weight is exactly one hundred English pounds avordupois for each human being.—[Hall's Journal of Health.

A Model Temperance Man.—Old Deacon Johnson, a great temperance man, sets a good example of total abstenance as far as he is seen. Not long ago he employed a carpenter to make some alteration in the fire-place, it was found necessary to remove the wainscot, when lo! a discovery was made which astonished everybody. A brace of decanters, a tumbler, and a pitcher full of ice-water, were cosily reposing there, as if they had stood there from the beginning. The deacon was summoned, and as he beheld the bottles he exclamed, blushing, "Well, I declare, that is curious, sure enough. It must be that old Bains left 'em when he went out of this 'ere house thirty years ago." "Perhaps he did," returned the carpenter; "but Deacon, the ice in the pitcher must have been friz migety hard to stay till this time."

Arrival of the Germania.

LAYING OF THE ATLANTIC CABLE

A SLIGHT DEFECT DISCOVERED, BUT SOON RECETIFIED.

Cape Race, Aug. 2, Asby Bay, Aug. 5.—The steamship Germania, from Hamburg on the 23rd ult and Southampton on the morning of the 26th ult, has passed this point en route to New York. She was boarded by a yacht of the Associated Press and a summary of European intelligence obtained.

The steamship America, from New York, arrived at Cows on the 26th. The steamship Moravian, from Quebec, arrived out on the 24th. The steamship Africa from Boston, arrived out on the 26th.

The Germania reports having passed the steamship Borussia from New York on the 23rd at 5.m., and the British ship, Tasmanavian, on the 31st.

The shore end of the Atlantic cable was landed and successfully connected in the instruments on board the Great Eastern. The knight of Kerry invoked success on the undertaking, and in conclusion called on Sir Robert Peel, who made an admirable address. Cheers were then given for the President of the United States, when the paying out of the heavy shore end of the cable commenced. The splice was completed in the most successful manner and the cable worked perfectly. The gunboats Terrible and Sphynx, accompanied the Great Eastern.

A telegram from Valentia, dated the 24th of July says:—"Insulation defects took place on Monday afternoon. The mischief is supposed to exist three miles west of the shore end splice, ond it is believed that it was caused by too much strain from the Great Eastern. She hove to ten miles from the shore. The Caroline is picking up and underrunning the splice and repairing the fault. It is expected that the damage will be rectified immediately. The rest of the cable remains perfect. A telegram from the Great Eastern dated the 26th of July says: "The cable is all 'O.K.' again. The signals are perfect. A small fault was discovered and cut out. The Great Eastern is now paying out the cable in lat. 52 long. 12."

A committee of working men has been formed in Berlin, for the purpose of organizing monster meetings to assert their right of publicly meeting. The authorities suppressed the banquets which they were to give in honor of the liberal deputies. At Cologne, Deutz, and in Nassau, the military dispersed the working men quietly. The public order was not disturbed.

Flour quiet and steady. Wheat irregular and declined 1d per contal. Corn quiet and upward.

The Convict Pritchard.

The Glasgow Herald says:—"On Monday the convict was visited by the Rev. Dr. Norman Macleod, the Rev. Dr. Miller, the Rev. Mr. Reid, Episcopalian clergymen, and the prison chaplain. From the information we have received, it would appear that the prisoner's demeanour remains unchanged, and that he even appears, if possible, more cool as his days draw rear a close. It is said that after the prisoner had remarked to one of his spiritual advisers that his confession was true, he was told that not a word of it was believed out of doors, and that he—the minister himself—was of the same opinion. The prisoner, it is alleged, then lay back, and looking calmly towards the ceiling of his cell, expressed himself to the effect that he had often wondered why Christ while on earth had experienced such difficulty in dealing with unbelievers; but that after the minister's remark he was not now surprised. On another occasion it is said that the convict began railing at his trial, and finding fault with the judge and his leading counsel, who, he said, he believed was in league with the Crown authorities. On being reminded that a person in his position should not give vent to such expressions, we are told that he made a remark to the effect that he could ascend the scaffold with a smile upon his face." The Dundee Courier says:—"Some facts have come to our knowledge connected with the mysterious burning of the servant in his house in Berkeley terrace, caculated to throw a deeper shade of suspicion over the occurrence than any thing in the account of it contained in the narratives of the calamity. It is quite true that the door of the room where the servant was sleeping was locked, but it is not quite so certain that it was locked from the inside. The key was not in the lock, but was found by Dr. Pritchard in a room full of smoke, lying on the bed where the servant lay charred and lifeless. Nobody saw the key until it was in the doctor's hand, and how he could have so readily found it in so unlikely a place amidst the dense and almost suffocating smoke, remains a mystery that we fear points to only one solution. On another matter—viz., the motive for the double murder of which he has been found guilty—considerable light is thrown by his relations with a wealthy heiress in Glasgow. The young lady in question had some £14,000 in her own right. Dr. Pritchard was on visiting and generally pretty familiar terms with the heiress, upon whom, simple and unsuspecting to a degree, no blame rests. Aware of her resources, the doctor sought a loan of some money. Before giving it, the young lady consulted a friend, who advised that the money should not be given. The advice was acted upon, and the refusal broke up the correspondence. The hiatus in the intercourse thus created rendered it impossible for the prosecution to introduce this episode into the trial; but, had matters all gone right, it is easy to receive what light would have shed upon the one point in the case on which no light fell in court, and no light has yet fallen in his confession."
