Evening Amusements at Home.

HIT OR MISS.—This game, which is very easy to learn and requires little thinking, is extremely diverting and may be continued as long as the players choose. The company being seated in a circle each person turns to the player at his right and asks a question in a whisper, after which he turns to his left-hand neighbor and whispers an appropriate answer to the question he asked. Each player is then called upon in turn to repeat aloud both the question and the answer that were addressed to him by his neighbors. For example: No 1 inquires of the player on his right, No. 2, "Why are you so stout?" He then turns to the person on his left, No. 3, and answers his own question by saying, "Because I eat three good meals a day." No. 2 whispers to his right-hand neighbor, "What do you like best to do?" and then turns to his left with the remark, "To swing in a hammock and read an interesting book." No. 3 asks of the companion at his right, "Can you play the violin?" and addresses the reply, "A monkey can do it better," to the player on the left. As soon as every one has been asked a question and received a reply, the leader requests each to announce to the company the query and answer he has received.

Of course, the fun lies in the incongruity or, as sometimes happens, the appropriateness of what is thus brought out. When the company consists of friends and neighbors who are well acquainted and who know how to indulge in harmless and good-humored personalities, this game may be made extremely amusing.

FLORAL CATECHISM.—This may be played by any number of persons of either sex and of all ages, and if the company is mixed, the leader calls upon men and women or boys and girls in alternation. The first player called upon is asked to name his or her favorite flowers, and does so, enumerating five or six, as, for instance, hyacinth, daisy, lily, heliotrope and crocus. This person is then sent from the room, and certain of the remaining players are given the names of the flowers mentioned. The absent one is now admitted and is asked, "What shall be done with hyacinth?" Not knowing who hyacinth is, he usually hesitates, but before the leader can count ten deliberately he must announce the doom of the flower in question. Thus he may say, "I will dry and preserve it," "I will pull it to pieces," "I will allow it to wither," or, "I will put it in a beautiful vase." Then he is questioned regarding the fate of the next flower, and so on until all are disposed of. When the flowers have thus been sentenced, the persons bearing their names will in turn mention their identity and the fates assigned them. Thus one will say, "I am Miss Hyacinth and am to be dried and preserved;" another will say, "I am Miss Daisy and am to be pulled to pieces;" and so on until the list of names is completed. The leader then calls upon another person, and the game is continued as long as it is amusing. If the player who mentions the list of floral favorites is a man or boy, the names should, if possible, be bestowed upon women or girls.

ELEMENTS.—The players form a circle and cast votes or draw lots for a leader, who takes his place in the centre with a soft ball or knotted handkerchief in his hand. He immediately tosses the ball to one of the players, names one of the elements, either earth, water, air or fire, and then begins deliberately to count ten in an audible tone. The person to whom the ball is thrown must name some dweller in the element mentioned before the counting is completed; and if he makes a wrong selection or is too late, or if he calls out the name of some animal after fire is mentioned, he must pay a forfeit and must take the leader's place and throw the ball until some other player makes an error. This game is particularly amusing and instructive to children, especially if they have some book or other reliable authority to which they can refer to ascertain the habits of various uncommon animals and to settle disputed points without lengthy discussion.

ADVICE.—All the players are supplied with pencils, and slips of paper that are all the same size and color. Each person writes on his or her paper certain advice regarding conduct, conversation, attire, reading, etc., and then drops it, without address, into a basket or some other receptacle provided for the purpose. When all the slips have been thus deposited, they are stirred together by the leader, who then says to the first player, "Mr. A. are you ready for advice?" Mr. A. thereupon draws out a paper and hands it to the leader, and the latter asks some pertinent question regarding the writing upon it, as, for instance, "Is this useful or needful advice?" "Is this advice to be followed?" or "Is this advice worthless?" When Mr. A. has answered this question satisfactorily the advice is read aloud, and whether appropriate or absurd, it cannot but be amusing. The advice may consist of warnings against common errors into which all mankind are likely to fall or against little personal weaknesses to which certain of the company are known to be prone. For example: "Do not carry your heart upon your sleeve 'for daws to peck at.'" "Use less ot honey and more of sincerity in your speech." "Be civil to your superiors." "Cut your garment according to your cloth." "Hats and canes do not constitute the highest good in life."

I LOVE MY LOVE.—Every letter in the alphabet save X may be used in this game; but some of them require great ingenuity and a considerable knowledge of Christian and proper names, besides not a little wit. The first player commences something like this: "I love my love with an A, because he is athletic and his name is Aristides. He lives in Attica. I feed him upon artichokes and give him a bouquet of azaleas." Then the second person may say: "I love my love with a B, because she is beautiful and her name is Becky. She lives in Bergen. I give her a beryl, feed her upon beans and give her a bouquet of beet blossoms." The third individual then remarks: "I love my love with a C, because she is crabbed. Her name is Caroline, and she lives in Chicago. I give her coral, feed her upon chicken and give her a bouquet of cactus." So the gave continues until Z is reached. The more absurd the reasons for loving the more diverting is the game. Any player failing to furnish the necessary reasons before the leader can count fifty (or any other number agreed upon) must pay a forfeit.

ROBBER'S STORY.—As many chairs, less one, are arranged in a circle as there are persons in the game, not counting the one who has been robbed and who tells the story of his experience with elaborate details. He bestows upon each player the name of some object mentioned in the thrilling narrative, and every time that article is named the proper person rises, turns round once and sits down again. When a word including all the objects, such as the road, is spoken, every one immediately arises and tries to take the chair of some one else. In the confusion somebody is again left standing, the person who had no seat at the beginning being particularly careful to obtain one this time. The story may be told in this fashion: "I was going to Denver wearing my gold watch (the person named watch rises, turns about and reseats himself); I had a heavy load for the poor horses to draw (at the word load all bob up and change places) and was fearful of a robber by the way (robber rises and sits again). I had a linen duster (duster whirls), a rifle (rifle whirls) and a box of luncheon (luncheon whirls) and expected to be out all day and part of the night on a lonely road. I tried to make Jack and Jenny, the horses (both whirl) hasten on, but they were tired, and the day was hot. I was eating my luncheon and had spread my umbrella, when the robber came in sight. I cracked my whip, Jack and Jenie shied, the luncheon-box fell off, my rifle wouldn't fire, the load turned over, the robber was caught beneath it, and I am here without my load." At every mention of an object the whirling takes place, and when the word load is heard, everybody is up at once. Of courses the story is told with great deliberation, and many incidents are mentioned to prolong it, objects being sometimes mentioned very close together and sometimes quite far apart. This game will be enjoyed quite as much by older persons as by juvenile members of the company.—The Deliverator.

Another Belfast Fish Story.

One of our sportsmen went on a fishing excursion to Swan Lake one day last week, and met with a queer experience. In addition to his fishing rod he carried his gun for a long time without meeting with any results and was about discouraged when suddenly there was a sharp bite and the end of his rod went under water, indicating that he had a large fish of some kind on his hook. While he was working his rod cacefully so as not to lose the fish, he heard a whirring sound and glancing up saw a partridge alight in a tree directly above him. What should he do? If he dropped the pole to get his gun the chances were he would lose the fish, but he did not hesitate long, and dropping the rod he grabbed his gun and was soon rewarded by seeing a fine plump partridge drop at his feet. He then turned to attend to the fish but was dismayed to find that rod and all had disappeared. The only way to account for it was that the fish had carried it off. Looking out on the lake he saw a ripple and rightly judging its cause to be his rod, he procured a boat and gave chase and after a tiresome pull, in which he charged the fish all over the lake, he finally grasped the rod and carefully working it pulled in a large trout. Of course he was the most overjoyed sportsman that ever came into town and when he explained how easy it is for him to bag game his friends locked on him with awe. His advice is now eagerly sought for by young sportmen and occasionally he descends to their level and explains the intricate method of shooting and fishing at the same time.—Bangor Paper.

A Singer's Royal Guest.

HOW MADAME ALBANI ENTERTAINS QUEEN VICTORIA AT AN INFORMAL TEA.

Once every summer Queen Victoria drives over from her Balmoral Castle to the Scottish Highlands home of Madame Albani-Gye, the famous prima-donna, where the latter entertains her at an informal tea. For years the Queen has made a practice of this, a compliment which Her Majesty bestows upon no other woman in the kingdom. It is a return for Madame Albani's appearance each year at Court to sing before the Queen, and to the prima-donna it affords an exceptional glimpse of England's royal sovereign.

"No outsiders are ever present," says Madame Albani, "and I see Victoria as a woman; never as a queen."

"How do you entertain your royal guest?" was asked of the prima-donna by a friends.

And for more than a hour the great singer held the uninterrupted interest of a private dinner-party with the story of how she served a tea for the Queen.

So full of interest was the narrative that Madame Albani was induced to write out the account, and it will shortly appear in The Ladies Home Journal, of Philadelphia, under the title of "Victoria at My Tea-Table.' Of its freshness of interest the caption of the article is the best indication.

A copy of the last portrait taken of Queen Victoria, and printed only for Her Majesty and the royal family, will accompany the article. "It will be my last portrait," wrote the Queen on this presentation copy, which is the only copy possessed outside of the royal household.

DIFFICULTY OF STEALING.—Only one attempt was ever made to steal from the bureau of engraving and printing. An employe engaged in printing $5 bills brought a sheet of lead foil with him one morning when he came to work, and slid it through his press without putting any ink on the plate that once. The impression that he got of the plate was first rate, but he was nabbed before he got out of the building on information by the girl assistant at his press, who saw him do the act. He was sent to penitentary, and a patent device was promptly adopted for future protection by which each press registers every revolution of the cylinder that prints one sheet of notes. The number of notes printed must correspond exactly with the number of revolutions or else there will be trouble, and no lead foil or wax either can be slipped through without leaving an unexplained record of its passage.—Washington Star.

—The editor sat on a hard-bottomed chair, trying to think of a thought, and he plunged all his fingers about through his hair, but not one topic they brought. He had written on temperance, tariff and trade, and the prospects of making a crop, and joked about ice-cream and weak lemonade, till his readers had told him to stop. And, weary of thinking, sleep came to his eyes, and he pillowed his head on the desk, when the thoughts which, awake, had refused to arise, came in troops that were strong and grotesque. And as the ideas airily float, he selects the bright one of the tribe; and this is the gem which while dreaming he wrote: "Now is the time to subscribe."

HOW TO SWEEP A STORE.—We don't use a leaky old sprinkling pot to sop the floor all over in poddles when we sweep. No, sir! We have wet sawdust, and I put a row of it across one end of the store and sweep that right along to the other end, just like a regiment marching across a ten acre lot. It catches all the dirt and carries it along. If it gets a little dry, I add some more. Some folks scatter sawdust all over the floor, but Mr. Vanders says that's no good; that the reason for using sawdust is to avoid wetting the floor all over and to have something that will absorb the dust.—Com. Enquirer.

Cracks.

It is about time to examine the cow stable and see if there are not some wide cracks that need closing up to keep the cold air out, says A. L. Crosby, in National Stockman. The cold cow gives cold comfort to her owner. There are various other "cracks" in dairying that need attending to; for instance, breeding to a scrub bull is a crack that will let many dollars out of your pocket; close this crack with a thoroughbred. Driving the cows in a trot is another; why is it that some men are always in a hurry at the wrong time? A wide crack that it will pay to stop up is letting the cows go without sufficient bedding. They lie in the manure, their udders get dirty and their legs and sides by spring have an armour of manure an inch and a half thick on them; the liquid manure is wasted, and no doubt a stack of straw is rotting down within easy reach of the stable. On any farm that needs manure, straw ought to be worth at least five dollars per ton for bedding alone, to say nothing of the comfort of all animals well bedded. The animal's comfort means the owner's profit. Making butter-milk flavored butter is a crack easily stopped up by washing the butter while in small grains. The market doesn't demand any flavor in butter except that of pure butter fat. Consumers prefer to buy their butter-milk, cheese, and butter in separate packages. And the calves: feed them well, get them into the habit of eating profitably a large quantity of feed, and when they are grown into cows they will be able to convert much feed into rich milk. Give the calves as warm a stable as you can afford. Those whose cows all "came in" last spring will soon find that the dollar will not "come out" so freely as it ought to when butter and milk are high, because then the yield of the cows will be at the lowest. If the cows have all been bred to repeat their last spring's performance there is a wide crack that can't be closed until another season. Have you an ice house? If you haven't, would it not pay you to build one? Even if you have cold spring or well water ice is very useful in the dairy, and also in the house and harvest field.

Waste Lands for Fruit and Forest.

Professor Maynard calls attention to the fact that apple trees, remarkable for their thrift and vigor, are often found on land so rough and stony that it cannot be cultivated. The fruit produced upon such land is noted for its high color and rich flavor, and for long-keeping qualities. There are thousands upon thousands of acres of this kind of land, and much of it is almost worthless for any other purpose than forests and the production of the large fruits, and if properly cared for, it would, in a few years, give a large income for the investment. In planting such, particular care must be given to the preparation of the soil directly around the tree, and to saving the material often found growing upon it, such as sedges, brush, etc., or obtained elsewhere to be used for mulch, to prevent the escape of the moisture that is rapidly carried away by the leaves or grasses and other
