WANT AD TIPS

The Buying Importance of Women

"Notice the facts I've underlined in that Want Ad?" asked the real estate advertiser. "Those facts are put there for a purpose. Three guesses to tell me what that purpose is!"

One fact underlined—the description was of a home offered for sale—was "6 roomy closets." Another was "Most convenient kitchen in the city." Still another was "Furnishings selected by foremost interior decorator," and a fourth, "A dream of a home!"

Let the reader, before the writer reveals the answer, take three guesses, too.

The answer is important to Want advertisers selling many things—yet many have not taken thought to heed it. There are many Want Ads on homes for sale which contain no such touches. They should contain them, for they multiply inquiries from one great section of the buying public. Those readers we mean are the women—the wives, mothers, daughters, sweethearts. The successful real estate advertiser took pains to make his Want Ad appeal to women.

Women do an overwhelming percentage of the retail buying of the nation. Even a hardware store recently reported that at least sixty per cent of store customers were women. The percentage is far higher in the department store. This condition exists—and it applies strongly to Want Ad buying, too—partly because women are by nature buyers, and partly because they have much more time to buy than their husbands.

While, in the case of a house or an automobile, a woman may not do the actual buying, in a great number of cases she will at least influence the choice. The good advertiser will think of this influence when he writes his Want Ad. He will put in it facts which will appeal to women. Closets; convenient kitchen; artistic decorations—those things instantly arrest feminine interest. And facts of equally strong appeal to women can be put into Want Ads selling many other things.
