WONDERFUL DAHOMEY.

Land of Amazons, Human Sacrifices Mermaids and Tame Whales.

An interesting and well-illustrated book on Dahomey is written and published by Henry Marcel, which name is the pseudonym of a well-known French resident of Philadelphia.

Dahomey was until recently the most important negro monarchy in Africa. It was especially famous for two things—its corps of Amazon warriors and its human sacrifices. Both these institutions are at an end since the French conquest of Dahomey.

The Amazons were the only instance in the modern world of a body of female warriors. They formed the bodyguard of the king, and were as remarkable for their fidelity as for their courage.

Every Dahomeyan was bound to present his daughters to a sort of medical board, which selected those suitable for the King's service. Little girls taken in war were also trained to be Amazons.

The Amazons were ordinarily compelled to remain celibate all their lives, but the King occasionally permitted one to marry a deserving male soldier. They were always very well formed, and some of them were handsome, in figure at least. The number of them was about 1,000, and they formed only a small part of the army. In addition to being brave on the battle-field, it is said that they were more cruel than the men soldiers, and very hard drinkers. Woman suffragists should find much food for thought and possibly encouragement in these facts.

The human sacrifices were first instituted in 1600. They were based on religious beliefs. Man is believed to be subject to the same wants in the next world as in this; so he must be buried not only with food and weapons, but provided with wives and servants if he is an important person.

The burial of a King was always attended by an immense slaughter. When King Gulzo died more than 500 human lives were sacrificed, including chiefs, musicians and slaves. He was buried in a big cave. His wives seated themselves round him in the order of their rank and poisoned themselves. Basketfuls of reads, and calabashes full of blood were piled on his tomb.

Wholesale sacrifices were also held at fixed periods. A traveler describing them says that during the night of these sacrifices everybody found in the street was clubbed to death. Companies of musicians walked about playing painful music. At midnight a volley of musketry announced the beginning of the executions. The victims were brought into the square by thirties. Sometimes death was produced by filling up the breathing apparatus. Some of the dead bodies were arranged in life-like attitudes.

The Dahomeyan coast is favored with some remarkable sea creatures. Among them is the manatee, or sea cow, an animal of the seal family, which has some resemblance to a human being. The female has very prominent breasts when nursing her young. It is suggested that this animal is responsible for the legends of mermaids and sirens.

Whales are common, and as they are not hunted they are very bold and roll themselves up high and dry on the beach in order to rub themselves free of weeds and parasites. This, Mr. Marcel says, is a very strange spetacle.

Bicycling for Women.

Here are brave words for the "schoolmarm," but the special application is rather to England than the United Staes: "Of old a gentlewoman taught as a last resource—when starvation stared her in the face. Her duty was to marry for a livelihood. Any situation in which she worked for daily bread was 'considered in the light of a degredation.' The words are Mary Wollstonecraft's, and she knew; she began life as a governess. Now teaching for a woman is an honorable profession, as it should be. She teaches because she has qualified herself to be a teacher, even as a barrister has equipped himself for the law, a doctor for medicine. Her work is done, not because a husband is not forthcoming, but because the world needs it.—Boston Journal.

Women as School Teachers.

A down-East dressmaker tells of an exacting patron, who brought back a dress because it was too large in the waist and wanted it refitted. It was left for the purpose, but before it was touched my lady sent for it. Thinking her customer was "notional" the dressmaker allowed it go as it was, saying nothing. The lady thought it had been fixed, and now complained that it was too tight in the waist. It was left as before, but nothing was done to it, as the dressmaker had now grown wise on the subject. It remained a few days and was again tried by the customer. This time the fit was perfect, and the lady has since repeatedly declared she never was so well suited.—Lewiston Journal.

The Feminine Imagination.

The increase in bicycling travel is something like phenomenal on all hands, but the number of women who are of late engaging in it, is especially remarkable. Is this to go on until it becomes a generally recognized method of locomotion for the fairer sex? There would be implied in this a remarkable change in the habits of society, yet it only requires a few more women bicycle riders to set the fashion in order to make it nearly as common in the one sex as in the other. We see no reason why, in the advance of what are known as woman's rights in various directions, her right to ride a bicycle should not be recognized not only as reasonable, which it is already, but as fully sanctioned in the customs of society.—Boston Herald.

A Painful Joke.

"My!" said the shoe clerk boarder, "but I did get a fine lot of sarcasm from my tailor when I had to stand him off again. Still, I rather think I deserved it." "In other words," gurgled the Cheerful Idiot, "you deem his remarks both cutting and fitting."—Indianapolis Journal.

He Knew Her.

"Don't ever speak to me again," she cried, angrily.

Her fiance shrugged his shoulders. "Be not hasty," he pleaded. "There are yet"—he moved a step nearer her—"several details of our wedding which cannot be satisfactorily arranged without consultation."—Tid-Bits.

A Triple Execution.

San Francisco, June 7.—Patrick Collins, Anthony Azoff and Amello Garcia were hanged at San Quentin Penitentiary to-day.

Harangued the Mob From the Gallows.

Birmingham, Ala., June 7.—Lee Harris and Abe Mitchell, colored highwaymen and murderers, were hanged to-day. Both marched with steady tread to the scaffold and made harangues to 2000 persons, who had been admitted to the jail yard.

IMPURE AIR AND INEBRIETY.

Some Rather Remarkable Cases Cited by a Physician.

"A case was reported to me," says Dr. T. D. Crothers, in Popular Health Magazine, "by an eminent New York physician, of a merchant who tried to abstain from all use of spirits at home, without success. He worked steadily in his office and lived in a rich house up town, where, apparently, every condition of healthy living was present. After several ineffectual efforts to give up all use of spirits he went out camping in the White Mountain region. In a few days all taste for the spirits left him, and for the first time in twenty years he became a total abstainer.

"On return to the city he drank again and could not stop. The next season he moved out in the country, and all taste for spirits left him. Finally, he gave up his city residence, and lived out in the country, coming to the city for a few hours at a time, and has become a total abstainer, not having any taste or desire for spirits. It seems most rational to suppose that poisoned air and defective ventilation were the exciting causes of the drink craze in this case. No other condition of surroundings and living could explain his ability to stop drinking in the country and not in the city.

Another incident well verified, seemed to bring out the same fact: A delicate, nervous child of 6 years, supposed to be inclined to consumption, was guarded with extraordinary care against colds and the open air in a rich city home. At 15 years of age a strong taste for spirits developed and at 20 he was an inebriate. His mother died and he was forced to go into the country to live. He became a total abstainer at once, and is now, at 26 years, a strong temperance man. It would appear that in this case some condition of cell and tissue starvation began from defective aeration and continued until the surorundings changed.

I think poison from the defective oxidation of the blood, together with imperfect elimination of waste products, is a very active factor in inebriety. In all rational treatment efforts to remove these possible causes should precede all other means of treatment. The continual inhalation of impure and defective air is always followed by the accumulation of poisons which, in many ways unknown, cause reflex nerve disturbances and reactions. The heart contracts more frequently, respiration is accelerated and elaboration of nutritive material is altered in all the cells of the body. Fatigue, depression and lowered vitality follow. Alcohol at this time is a grateful narcotic, which not only conceals the real condition but brings increased degeneration with new bacteria formations and diminished resistance to disease. The brain and nervous system suffers as much as any other part of the body, although this is not recognized.

TOLSTOI ON HUMAN SUFFERING.

Nine-Tenths of Which is Useless and Could Be Avoided.

Count Tolstoi writes in the Revue Encyclopedique as follows: "Go through a crowd of people—preferably city people; examine these tired, anxious, wasted faces; remember your life and the lives of the men whom you have known intimately; recall the violent deaths, the suicides of which you have heard—and ask yourself the reason of all this death, suffering and despair. And you will see, however strange it may appear, that the cause of nine-tenths of human suffering is the present life of the world, that this suffering is useless, that it could be avoided, and that the majority of men are martyrs to worldly ideas.

"Recently, on a rainy autumn Sunday, I crossed the market near the tower of Soulkharey in a street car. For a third of a mile the car made its way through a dense crowd that closed in again behind us. From morning till evening these thousands of men, most of them hungry and in rags, jostle each other in the mud, dispute, deceive and hate each other. The same thing goes on in the markets of Moscow and other cities. These men will pass their evenings in the wine shops, and afterward will seek their holes and corners. Monday they begin again their accursed existence.

Think of the existence of these men, of the situation which they abandon, and of that which they choose. Consider the labor to which they give themselves, and you will see that they are martyrs.

"All have left their fields, their houses, their fathers and their brothers, often their wives and children. They have renounced everything and come to the city in order to acquire that which the world considers necessary. All of them are there, from the operative, the coachman, the seamstress and the prostitute, to the wealthy merchant, the office-holder, and the wives of all of them, to say nothing of the tens of thousands of unfortunates who have lost everything and live on scraps and brandy in the free lodging houses.

"Go through this crowd; watch poor and rich alike; look for a man who says that he is satisfied and believes that he possesses what the world deems necessary; you will not find one in a thousand."

As to Fast Thinking.

In an essay in the Forum Mr. Frederick Harrison says that the late Anthony Trollope once told him that he began his literary work at half past 5 o'clock every morning and "for three hours I regularly produce 250 words every quarter of an hour." That is, he composed at the rate of 1,000 words an hour. Mr. Trollope must have written with surprising rapidity if he wrote long hand; and he must have thought in haste if he wrote shorthand. An expert penman may write over 1,000 words an hour all day long if he has not to concoct thea thought as he wields the pen; but for a man to write and to think up 1,000 words each hour for three hours running every morning, just after getting out of bed, we mean words with good solid thought in them, is too much. A thinker, if he be a quick thinker, may dictate 1,000 or more words an hour to a stenographer, as he is relieved from the manual labor of writing, and has merely to operate the think thing," as the brain has been called by a German philosopher; but even that is a pretty hard job, and cannot be kept up all day with advantage to the readers of the thinker's thought.—New York Sun.

from Manitoba within the past ten years. In 1885 790 cars, representing 500,333 bushels, were inspected at Port Arthur by Mr. Gibbs and his assistant. In 1888 the number of cars had risen to 7444, in 1891, 11,991 cars, and in 1894 the number was 16,708 cars, representing 10,581,773 bushels. The inspection fees last year reached the sum of $10,024, being at the rate of 60 cents a car. Out of this sum Mr. Gibbs paid $3875 for assistance. From each car 4 lbs. of wheat are taken as a sample to protect the Inspector in case of appeal on the part of the purchaser against his grading.

Fresh Salmon to Be Free.

It is probable that fresh salmon will be placed on the free list shortly. A recent ruling of the Treasury Board at Washington enables Canadian fresh salmon to be imported into the United States free of duty. Several American canners have located their establishments at Point Roberts, in American territory along the Fraser River, and as Canadian fishermen can now supply them with fish without paying duty, the British Columbia canners ask to be put in a similar position, that they may be able to derive their supply of fish from United States sources when the run is short in Canadian waters.

Notes.

A Miss Eliza J. McFadden, a native of Ontario, who resided in the United States from 1879 to 1894, arrived in Manitoba last year with two adopted children, bringing with her 15 head of horned cattle, four head of horses, a number of pigs and settlers' effects to start farming, understanding at the time that she would be permitted to obtain a homestead entry for 160 acres of land. The law is against her being allowed a homestead entry, but by Order-in-Council a quarter section of Dominion land has been sold to her at a dollar an acre.

Representatives of the Civil Service met to-day to consider the proposed change in the Superannuation Act. It appears there is not much objection to the increase in the percentage deduction from salaries to go to the fund, but the Service would like some guarantee that in regard to those who die in harness some provision should be made for the family. At the present time if an officer dies before he is superannuated his family receives nothing but a gratuity equal to two months' salary, although the officer may have contributed to the Superannuation Fund for 30 years.

The best varieties of plums are very profitable, and fruit growers are of the unanimous opinion that the curculio is a thing now not much to be dreaded; where plums are planted in large quantities its ravages are hardly felt. It is the isolated tree which suffers.

Winter wheat is one of the hardiest of crops, and unless attacked by insects seldom fails to produce fairly well in yield. For that reason wheat will receive attention on many farms and can be relied upon as being sure to return something in the shape of straw and grain.

Cuban Insurgents Repulsed.

Havana, June 7.—A despatch from Manzanilla says it is reported here that the Government troops have had several fights with the insurgents within the last few days. On June 4 a band of insurgents attacked a small detachment of troops in the vicinity of the estate of Tranquilidad, but were repulsed with a loss of four killed and several wounded.

FARM WORK IN SUMMER.

Silage and Green Crops—Garden Hints—Timely Notes.

Turkeys hatched as late as July 1 will make profitable birds, though for heavy-weights the earlier they are hatched the better.

Milk and eggs are two articles that are always sold for cash, and they enable the farmer to receive daily returns. He does not have to wait for harvest time with such products.

It is usually a foolish waste of money to feed a dry cow through a long winter; more is to be made by selling both cow and feed. Few cows are good enough to keep unless they are giving milk liberally.

Improved breeds of cattle are regarded with favor because they have large feeding capacity. The "breed and the trough" can only be combined by selecting stock that makes the most gain from the food.
