DIVORCE IS EASY IN SWITZERLAND

Costs Less Than a Marriage License—Poor Unions' View of the Pension Bill

LONDON, July 30.—In order to bring out local talent among the rural population of Dorset, Lady Baker is trying to establish a terra cotta industry. Dorset is peculiarly rich in claps which will bake many shades of red. Her ladyship is having a kiln constructed, and hopes to be able to hold, by September, an exhibition of terra cotta work all locally produced.

In a sale of war medals and decorations at Messrs. Glendining's galleries, there were offered two interesting regimental colors of the 5th Regiment, British Legion. DIVORCES EASY IN SWITZERLAND

According to statistics of divorce just published, Switzerland heads the list with a proportion of forty divorces to 1,000 marriages, France comes next, with 21 per 1,000, and Germany third with 17 per 1,000. It is easier to obtain a divorce in Switzerland than a marriage license, divorce being cheap and rapid, and without disagreeable publicity.

POOR LAW VIEW OF PENSION BILL.

The Association of Poor Law Unions of England and Wales disapproved of the general disqualification of paupers for the receipt of old age pensions, but decided to take no action in the matter if a definite assurance were given, on behalf of the government that the disqualification was only intended to apply to the first year's working of the scheme.

SURGERY IN PARTIAL VACUUM.

An experiment which cost a dog's life was performed at the Rockefeller Institute last Monday, says the New York Sun. Among its results may be the saving of many human lives in this country. By reason of the civil war and the number of men therein wounded the United States gave to the world many opportunities in the advancement of surgery, but nowadays America is again going to Europe for many of the newest developments in the science, and it was from Europe that the men came who operated at the Rockefeller Institute. The operation on the dog, which was for the purpose of demonstrating the possibilities of a new method of surgery devised in Germany, was performed in the presence of a considerable group of physicians and surgeons of New York who were very much interested in the demonstration. They had read plenty about it in the medical literature of Germany but had not seen the method of demonstrated.

Briefly, the purpose of the new method is to facilitate operations in the chest cavity. Everybody knows of the wonderfully intricate operations, as they seem to the lay mind, which are and have long been successfully performed in the abdominal cavity. Operations within the area of the chest, however, have been beyond the skill of the surgeons in large part for the reason that the opening of the chest cavity sufficiently for free operating work resulted in collapse of the lungs from the atmospheric pressure. The patient died for want of breath. For years the profession has studied how best to narcotize the human patient when it was desirable to operate on the chest.

Dr. Ernest Sauerbach, professor of surgery at Marburg University, Germany, devised a method to this end, and early last week he arrived in New York at the invitation of the American Medical Association to demonstrate his method at the Rockefeller Institute. He brought with him his assistant and a cagelike operating room built largely of glass, which is the essential vehicle of his operations. He remained in New York only a week and departed for Germany on Saturday. Among the professional men who witnessed his work at the Rockefeller Institute where Dr. Willy Meyer, Dr. S. J. Meltzer, Drs. Levene, Lamar, Jobling and Noguchy of the Institute and two woman doctors attached to the institute.

The operating room or glass cage in which Prof. Sauerbach works is only about four or five feet square and not quite high enough for a six foot man to stand upright in. Dr. Meltzer in talking of the demonstration yesterday when the newspaper man asked him to tell them something about it mentioned the fact that negative pressure, as the doctors call it, is necessary for the function of breathing in men and other animals; in other words a pressure less than the normal pressure of the atmosphere from which the lungs are normally protected by the walls of the chest. In studying the problem Dr. Sauerbach evolved the idea of a glass enclosed operating chamber in which a partial vacuum could be maintained, but with sufficient air for the operatons to live and work in it.

The normal atmosphere pressure being 760 millimetres Dr. Sauerbach found that a diminution of eight or ten millimetres was sufficient for his purposes; that with the air pressure reduced to that degree the lungs of animals could continue their function though unprotected by their natural shields. In his operating chamber the air is so reduced. The pressure is kept down by an exhaust pump which is constantly working and a new supply of fresh air is admitted under control all the time passing into the beamber througuh a "wash bottle" or filter. The operators and the body of the patient or subject except the head are thus in a field of puruified, diluted air. The head of the patient or subject protrudes through a hole in the chamber wall into the normal atmosphere a rubber guard closing the aperture between the patient' neck and the perimetre of the wall opening. So the patient is breathing all the time the normal air and so is the assistant who administers the anaesthetic.

Under these conditions Dr. Sauerbach found that the chest could be opened without collapse of the lungs. This discovery therefore, permits of operations in desperate cases on the lungs, or for example in cancer of the aesophagus, which heretofore has been inaccessible to the surgeon because as soon as the thorax was opened the lungs collapsed.

It is the hope of the profession that this method may in time make it as easy to operate within the chest as in the abdomen, Dr. Sauerbach's invention opened the way for other experimenters along the same lines and one of his associates in Marburg, Prof. Brauer, has already put forth another method aiming at the same results by almost an exact reversal of the Sauerbach method. The Sauerbach method is open to obvious objection that it compels the operating surgeon and his assistants to work in an inconviently small enclosure and necessitates provision in advance within this limited space of every possible thing which might be required during the operation no matter what unexpected developments there might be. Prof. Brauer therefore advances a method whereby the head of the patient and of the assistant in charge of the anaesthetic alone should be within thec hamber which instead of being a chamber of rarified air for the patient to breathe, and so equalize lung pressure, leaving the opertaing surgeons free as in the ordinary operating room. Dr. Sauerbach and his assistant at the Rockfeller Institute gave their demonstration on a dog provided for the purpose. Dr. Sauerbach announced in advance that after the operation he would kill the dog by chloroform, after showing that it could live within the chamber, and live after the excision of a part of the lungs, and he did so, for owing to the presence of so many doctors who wanted to witness the demonstration and study it carefully the operation was necessarily prolonged.

Another operation was performed on a dog, part of whose intestines was cut out and the ends of the remainder joined together by a silver coupling, which is described as a new invention to do away with the need of sewing up in such operations.

"OUR DARLING" ON CASKET OF DEAD DOG

Undertaker Cared for Canine's Body Which Was Laid Out in Sitting Room

WILMINGTON, Del., July 30.—A pet dog belonging to Mr. and Mrs. William P. Perkins, of 1118 West Eighth street, was recently interred with all the ceremonies incidental to the burial of a person.

The night the animal died an undertaker was sent for and a chestnut casket, with a silver plate bearing the words "Our Darling" was made. The body was laid out in the sitting room of the house the next day, where it was viewed by many neighbors. It rested on a silk blanket and was surrounded with flowers.

Interment was made in the yard of the Perkins home, and the owners and their friends wept as the casket was lowered into the grave. When the attendants began to throw dirt upon the casket Perkins made them desist, and securing a broom, he swept all of the dirt from the top of the casket, after which he placed a newspaper over the casket and the interment was completed.

A tombstone is now being made by a Wilmington manufacturer to mark the dog's resting place.
