The Tories have got out another roor bach. A roorbach means a falsehood, issued at the eleventh hour in the hope that there will not be time to contradict it. This last roorbach comes ostensibly from a person in Winnipeg said to be named Crawford, though whether there is such a person we cannot say. It is merely a new version of the old yarn, that Wiman and Farrer and Laurier were annexing Canada to the United States, etc. We doubt if last-minute lies have the effect some people think. However, it is well to believe nothing the Tories put out at the last hour.

The Franchise Act Fraud.

QUEBEC, March 4.—The Liberals of Quebec Center have found out that a great number of voters' names were taken off the lists since last year. Mr. Larue, the revising officer, being interviewed on the matter, said it was Mr. Casse's fault in omitting the names in preparing the list. Quite a number of Liberal voters are deprived of their electoral rights through this trick.

Attempted Suicide at Hamilton.

HAMILTON, March 4.—Another attempt to commit suicide took place here this afternoon. Gertrude Ferguson, a young woman of the demi-monde, about 28 or 30 years of age, living on Napier street, became dissatisfied with life and in a fit of despondency took a dose of laudanum. About 1 o'clock a young man friend called to see her and found her lying stupified in one of the rooms. Two doctors succeeded in bringing the unfortunate woman back to life.

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the sytem. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and conver the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

AN ARMY PORTIA.

By Charles King, U. S. Army.

AUTHOR OF "THE COLONEL'S DAUGHTER," "THE DESERTER," "FROM THE RANKS," "DUNRAVEN RANCH," "TWO SOLDIERS," ETC.

"So far as the enlisted men are concerned the people have no complaint to make. It is, indeed, the contemplation of their wrongs and sufferings that has roused the popular clamor against their artistocratic and overbearing taskmasters. Just why it is that the instant a young man escapes from that hot-bed of flunkeyism and snobbery, West Point, and dons the straps of a second lieutenant, he should imagine that he owns the earth and that the nation should bow down to him, is something no intelligent mind can understand. But to become convinced that it is so beyond peradventure, one has only to visit this representative army post, garrisoned as it is by large detachments of so-called distinguished regiments; though, from all accounts, the distinction they have earned seems chiefly to be connected with drinking-bouts and gambling-tables."

"On every side it was declared to your correspondent that civilians who ventured out to the fort were treated with contumely and insult, that the officers rudely ordered them off the reservation and forbade them to enter the sacred precincts of the barracks and even caused their ejection from the public store and saloon, kept at the post by one Stone, who truckles, of course, to his official neighbors and obtains in return the mandate that the soldiers must spend their money with him at the swindling prices, and the prohibition against their having any dealings with the reputable merchants in the city. On the other hand, the merchants who have been so unfortunate as to trust the officers are not able to collect their bill at all, and are absolutely forbidden to enter the garrison when they seek to press their claims.

"Here is the brief history of one day's experience. In company with one of the oldest, wealthiest, and most repected business men of this section, your correspondent drove to Fort Ryan this morning to see for himself how far the facts would justify the allegations, and if a lingering doubt remained it was at one and forever rudely dispelled. A case of particular hardship had been brought to our attention and we desired to see Trooper Welsh in person. He was on sick-report, excused from drill by reason of the treatment that had been accorded him by the commanding officers of his troop, or we probably could not have seen him at all. Seizing a moment when the officers were away at drill, Mr. S. sent a message asking the young soldier to come out. A fine-looking, intelligent man of about 25 years was presented to your correspondent, and briffy and simply told his story. It was enough to make an American's blood boil in his veins to note the emotion and humiliation it seemed to cause him. He came of an excellent family in the East, but, having long desired for patriotic motives to become a soldier of the flag, he had against their wishes enlisted under an assumed name. From the very start his captain had compelled him to work about his house like a common drudge. He had to black boots, build fires, sweep the kitchen, actually do chores for the captain's cook. In vain he begged to be allowed to join his troop and learn his duties as a soldier; he was sternly refused. It made his own comrades among the soldiers look down upon him, and when he could find time to visit them at the barracks the sergeants abused him like a thief. But the man who particularly hounded him, was Second Lieutenant Hearn, a young martinet fresh from West Point, who never lost a chance of cursing him for his errors on drill or mistakes made afterwards. The captain had taught him that when at work for him he must not quit it to jump up and salute every lieutenant who happened along, and just because he remained seated and at work when Lieutenant Hearn passed by, the latter cursed him like a dog, and had him thrown into a filty dungeon, and there he lay until he was tried by court-martial and sentenced by a gang of Hearn's comrades to fine and imprisonment for obeying his captain's orders. Another time he was cleaning the captain's horse, the lieutenant's horse, which was next him on the line, kept backing over him, treading on him, and knocking his brushes out of his hand; and because he simply pushed him back and spoke sharply, Lieutenant Hearn rushed in and swore he had a mind to kick him black and blue. 'If he had,' said Welsh—and young soldier's eyes blazed with pent-up feelings—'I could no longer have controlled myself. I would have knocked him down and appealed to the people of America to uphold me.' For this he was again thrust into the vermin-haunted dungeon, and this made him so ill that the surgeon himself had been compelled to interpose in his behalf. 'I would desert and end it all,' said the poor fellow, with tears in his eyes, 'but I have sworn to serve my country, and I shall keep my oath.' When told that the Palladium would see him righted, though the heavens fell, his emotion was something that would have melted the stoutest heart.

"But now comes the crowning peak of blackguardism. Warned by some spy, doubtless of the fact that his victim was telling his story to citizens, Lieutenant Hearn suddenly appeared on the scene, and before our eyes, with vulgar abuse and tyrannical bearing, ordered Private Welsh instantly to leave. In vain the young soldier respectfully pleaded that he had a right to speak with friends who came to see him. In vain he pointed out that he was not on duty at the time. In vain Mr. S. interposed in behalf of justice and decency. The brutal bully seized the weakened invalid in an iron grasp, dragged him like a dog to the gutter in front, and then, with cuffs and curses, drove him before him into the guard house. Meantime Mr. S., who had formerly many friends at the post, hastened into the officer's club-room, hoping to explain the matter and secure justice for the unfortunate fellow. But it was a hapless move. What business had he, a civilian, to intrude uninvited into the mighty presence of half a dozen beardless young satraps in shoulder-straps? He was rudly ordered to leave the premises; and when, in his indignation, he protested against such treatment, Lieutenant Hearn himself came back boiling with rage, calling for his troopers to come and eject these intruders from the garrison. We were actually driven by force off the reservation.

"Your correspondent has, of course, made immediate and respectful representation of these facts to the general commanding the department, and when next he visits the fort will do so with a safeguard that no bully in the uniform of a second lieutenant will dare gainsay. This is but the prelude of futher details still more disgraceful to the pampered minions of a too long-suffering public."

For a few moments there was silence. Then the major glanced around his circle of listeners.

"Well, Hearn," said he, as he folded the paper, "somewhere I have heard the expression, 'didn't I tell you so?' Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori. I don't wonder you love your profession."

GOLDWIN SMITH ON "BOGEYS."

Past Scares Which Monopolists Raised to Frighten the Timid.

"Protection" Does Not Afford Work or Raise Wages.

Mr. Goldwin Smith sent the following letter to the chairman of St. Mark's (Toronto) Ward Reform Association, in response to an invitation to be present at the Reform meeting in St. Andrew's Hall:

Were this a mere party fight I would not be inclined to respond to the invitation with which your committee has honored me. But there is now a question above party—the Government has challenged all of us to say whether we desire for Canada free access to the market of her own continent or not. We are all bound to answer. It seems to me that common sense can answer only in one way. Why is it not as bad for us to be cut off by a tariff wall from our neighbors to the south as it would be for us to be cut off from the other Provinces of the Dominion, or as it would be for any State of the Union to be cut off from the rest?

The Government is seeking markets for us in the West Indies, Australia and at the ends of the earth. Why reject the best and richest of all markets, which is that at our door?

Experience has condemned the National Policy, falsely so-called, since it is the policy only of certain forced kinds of production. The farms are suffering, and when the farms suffer the city must soon suffer too.

That protectionist legislation raises wages is a fallacy, the hollowness of which the artisans of the United States have at last found out. We might almost as well talk of raising the level of the lake with forcing pumps. Protectionism drives labor into certain trades and creates in those trades an unnatural activity, which is followed by glut and short time. The nominal wages which it gives are not real wages, since goods being made dearer the money buys less. What protected manufacturer shares the gains of his monopoly with his workmen? I saw the other day a report by the manager of a protected company, saying that the company had been making 20 per cent. and was going to make more; but it said not a word about wages. The only thing that makes wages really rise all round and stay raised is prosperity, such as is produced by a sound commercial system, framed not for a few but for all.

I remember the change in England from protectionism to free trade. Under protectionism there was hunger in our cities and people were boiling grass to eat. Free trade brought a flood of wealth, of which it has been shown that a full share went to the wage-earner. But free traders were charged then, as they are charged now with "selling the country for mercenary and sordid considerations," as though anything could be mercenary and sordid which brings comfort, happiness and the moral elevation which attend them, into the homes of the great mass of the people.

We are told that if the tariff wall were down Toronto would be swallowed by New York. Yet Chicago, Buffalo, Rochester and Detroit are growing all the time, and real estate is higher there than it is here. Albany is growing, though it is within four hours' run of New York.

That American statesmen are ready to meet us the favorable reception of Mr. Hitt's resolution clearly proved, though the block of business in the last days of Congress prevents the resolution from being formally passed. But Sir John Macdonald has assumed an attitude towards the Americans and used language about them which make it morally impossible that he should negotiate successfully at Washington on our part.

The assertion that there would not be trade between us and the Americans is belied by the fact. There is already, in spite of the tariff wall, more trade between us and the United States than between us and Great Britain. We should not lose the British market by gaining the American; we should have them both.

We are told that the Americans are a "hostile" nation, and that we must therefore refuse the benefits of interchange with them. In that hostile nation are now fully 1,000,000 of Canadians, and Englishmen and sons of Englishmen without number. Many are now the Canadians who have kinsmen on that side of the line. The Queen of England has lost no opportunity of showing her gracious desire to cultivate the friendship of the American people, and her envoy, Mr. Chamberlain, stated not long ago in this city that he could not speak of the Americans as a foreign nation. The quarrel which ought to have died away long ago is kept up mainly by a clique who seem to think that hatred of the Americans is a mark of gentility. To this fancy we are to sacrifice the great material interests of our people.

Independence will be in no danger from the extension of trade, though it may be in some danger from the pinch of restriction. Nothing can deprive Canada of her independence or change her political relation either to the mother country or to the United States except the free vote of the Canadian people. Yours faithfully,

Toronto, March 2. GOLDWIN SMITH.
