What the Spring Winds are Saying.

Listen, Susie, my darling,
Here by the fireside bright,
Do you know what the winds are saying,
Abroad in the gusty night?
Moaning under the windows
Like the voice of a child that grieves,
Making the maples shiver
And creak at the cottage eaves;

Listen, Susie, my darling,
The winds are singing a song
Of the Spring that is softly stealing
From Summer lands along.
The snowdrops smile as they hear it—
A smile for the Spring's sweet sake—
And the shy little violets whisper:
"We hear, we are broad awake."

No matter, Susie, my darling,
Though the Spring winds drearily blow,
I am sure that the daisies are stirring,
Down under the sheltering snow,
In spite of the blustering weather
The trees are budding again,
And the daffodils whisper together,
And wait for the April rain.

Nine Days in Salt Lake City.

CHAPTER V.
(Continned.)

I had considered the subject in many of its phases. There is no doubt that while good health reigned in the family, the possessor of a dozen or more wives would be a king in his way. He could literally rest in the bosom of his family. A competition for favour among the fair sex would result in securing him every possible convenience and domestic comfort. Bewitching smiles would hail his incoming, and his departure to the scene of his daily toil would be the signal for a display of tenderness in the shape of love-laden glances which could not be otherwise than inspiring. In this respect there might be too much of a good thing. The lord of a dozen women would have concentrated on him a battery of loving light which could not be otherwise than enervating in its intensity, unless the subject were of the most phlegmatic temperament.

The scattered rays of an October sun are extremely agreeable, but if we concentrate them by means of a convex glass disc the party who occupies the focus would find his position far from desirable and—and so we imagine would the owner of a dozen wives.

Then, look at this phase of the subject. If we keep a woman in health—or she keeps us, which amounts to the same thing, besides being often only too true, especially in Salt Lake—we must surely do the same thing in sickness. There are constantly recurring periods of disease either contagious or epidemic, to say nothing of minor ailments which, in peculiarly trying seasons, assume an alarming character. Now, imagine one to be the owner of ten wives, if you please. My disposition is tender and affectionate in my family relations, my love descending by easy stages till it includes the very smallest of the numerous "olive branches." Typhoid fever has invaded the household and laid its iron grasp on the family treasures. Within a fortnight I have consigned to the dust seven wives and eighteen children. I have shed barrels of tears, leaving my body and skin as dry as a piece of old parchment. I've worn crape around my hat and on my sleeve, and bunches of the same sable woe indicator cling like burrs all the way from the nape of my neck and depend from my coat tail. My presence, like a moving hearse, puts a damper on all amusements, and I am pointed out in pity as one on whom the hand of the Lord has been particularly heavy. The Local Yell and Enoch's Chariot have each honored me with the following notice in their columns:—

"Terrible fatality."—"Our esteemed and sainted Brother Forbes hath been fearfully afflicted in his family relations. Like that good man, Joseph Smith, the Most High has chosen in His wisdom to sorely oppress him. Death at one fell swoop has removed from his tender and fostering care seven worthy women and eighteen interesting children. Our sorely chastened brother may now be considered almost a bachelor again and, should on account of his manifold troubles receive the most tender consideration from the ladies. Under their cheering influence his griefs—great as they undoubtedly are—will become a thing of the past, and he will again take his place as one of the pillars of the Church and State. The Lord taketh away wives and the Lord will yet bestow more according to his promise. Our brother hath our sincere condolences."

How could I put myself in the way of such a fearful train of affliction. Under ordinary circumstances the woes of humanity are quite sufficient without multiplying them by wholesale and voluntarily. Death in the family, at all times solemn and trying, cannot surely be lessened by applying the principle that familiarity breeds contempt, nor do we think we would be doing justice to the finer feelings of human nature by supposing the average man can reconcile himself to the loss of loved ones by applying the doctrine that they "are not dead but only gone before," however agreeable such a course of procedure may be to the doctrines of Christianity.

Again, suppose we attend some social gathering—a ball for instance. The saints dance—David danced. Fortunately for our sense of modesty all the woman cannot go. The children have to be attended to and the domestic machinery cannot be allowed to come to a stand still. Then the question of fitting dresses promptly fixes a limit to the number of my escort. To fit out the household in novelties in the shape of dresses, bonnets, ribbons, gloves &c, would speedily bring on a financial crisis in my business. My stand had best be one of neutrality, for if I interfere, I am in a worse position than the representative who tried to please the temperance people by an adjustment of the liquor tariff. For a week the household has been in state of feverish commotion. My wife Dorintha has been dressed in smiles for two days only to be driven into despondency by some new complication not choosing, like good, sensible Sarah Ann, to present herself for criticism in her last year's finery. Lucity Ann who has money in her own right, is as gay with fast colours as a flamingo or a savage in his war paint and Cynthia has got together a pile of material about which the only mystery seems to be as to where she will hang the several articles. Well the matter is finally arranged and I am off like a Hudson River Tugboat in charge of a fleet of wood barges. After handing the doorkeeper a bundle of tickets about the bulk of a pack of cards we are allowed to enter and at the expiration of half an hour, I have secured seats for my numerous family, and found a congenial companion with whom I
