"I'll show you what I've done when we get an opportunity," says Mr. Palmer. "Eh? dinner? Very well. Where are the young people? Oh, here they are," as Stancy and May come in, followed by Paula and Alice and Bob, the later looking as if the whole thing were a nuisance, and his dress-clothes in particular a hardship almost too great to be borne.

Alice has found time to don her daintiest dress, and looks as cool and sweet as a garden lily. Paula, on the other hand, has just had time to change her dusty dress for a plain simple sateen of cream, with a big sash, but strange to say it is upon her that the major's eyeglass falls, and if he uttered his thoughts aloud he would have said, "There's the promise of a beautiful woman."

"And where's Sir Herrick?" says Mr. Palmer, with a marked air of disappointment. "I do hope he's coming."

There is silence for a moment, then Bob says bluntly:

"Paula saw him last. Is he coming, Paula?"

All eyes go to the face, and for a second a vivid blush burns there, then it fades, and she says, quietly enough: "Yes, he said he would come; but he had to go to the inn first."

"Oh, we'll wait; of course we'll wait," says Mr. Palmer.

Paula raises her eyes.

"He wished me to ask you not to wait," she says, as carelessly as she can.

"Oh, but—" begins Mr. Palmer protestingly, but the major breaks in with "I really think, if you will allow me, that Herrick would rather we did not wait."

"As you please, of course, major," assents Mr. Palmer. "Will you give your arm to Miss Estcourt?"

With courtly grace the major leads Alict in, and the rest follow. Paulo finds herself by chance sitting next the empty chair reserved for Sir Herrick, with Stancy on her other side; that estimable young gentleman has, with the change of clothes, regained all his old confidence and self-satisfaction, and inwardly rejoicing at the absence of Sir Herrick begins to pay Paula immediate attention.

"So glad you weren't hurt this morning," he lisps, affectedly.

"Well, I don't know yet," responds Paula, mischievously, "one doesn't discover at once whether one is injured or not, you know."

"Awful nuisance," he says, "It really wasn't my fault, you know; if Sir Herrick hadn't interfered I should have pulled them round."

"I thought you'd say so," says Paula, looking at him with an innocent face.

"Oh, yes, any one could see that," he says, confidently. "Stupid thing to interfere with a man who's got the reins. I expect you're tired out, walking all that way. Dreadful bore for you."

The faintest flush comes into Paula's face as she thinks of that homeward walk an' all its delicious ecstasy.

"I wasn't much bored," she says, quietly.

"I suppose Sir Herrick is quite knocked up, as he doesn't put in an appearance?" he goes on, with a sneer. "Got a shock, perhaps; he seems awfully nervous."

"I don't know," says Paula.

"You must let me give you'a ride in the new dog-cart," he says, condescendingly. "Tandem, you know; we shan't have anybody to interfere with us there."

Paula coiors angrily. What does he mean by it? Hitherto he has confined his attentions to Alice. Alice can ride in the dog-cart if she likes, but as for her— Something like an angry refusal rises to her lips, when the door opens and the footman announces Sir Herrick.

Paula keeps her eyes down, and bends over her plate, determined to crush down the blush which threatens to rise to her face, determined also that she will not look up. But the temptation is irresistible, and when she lifts her eyes slowly, and with forced carelessness, she almost starts.

Is this tall, patrician-looking figure the indolent young man, dressed in a suit of cords, she parted with scarcely an hour ago?

The sensation of surprise and awe were girlish and unsophisticated, of course, but scarcely without reason, for Sir Herrick was one of those men who, distinguished-looking in any dress, look particularly so in evening attire. As he stood in the door-way, his glance slowly traveling round—stood in the assured, easy attitude peculiar to a well-born, highly-bred man—the difference between him and Stancy was marvelous.

Stancy with all his Poole-cut clothes and gorgeous jewelry, seemed to shrink into a commonplace young man disguised as a gentleman, and Mr. Palmer appeared twice as red and common-looking; the major alone bore the comparison.

The feeling of pride that shot through Paula's heart as she thought, "and this prince among men belongs to me," was girlish too, but equally reasonable.

With just a smile and a little bow that comprehends them all, Sir Herrick follows the butler to the empty chair and takes his place, and the butler brings him his soup:

"Hope you'll forgive us for going on, Sir Herrick," says Mr. Palmer, apologetically. "Your uncle thought you'd prefer that we didn't wait."

"My uncle is always right," says Sir Herrick, calmly. "I should have been sorry if you had waited."

Then he goes on with his soup, and not a word does he speak, but Paula is satisfied, for, as he takes his seat, his hand just touches her arm, lightly as a feather, but as distinct a caress as if he had kissed it.

"None the worse for the accident, I hope?" says Mr. Palmer, from the head of the table.

"No, thanks," replies Sir Herrick. "We all escaped I think."

"Thanks to Mr. Stancy's excellent coaching," says the major, unblushingly.

Bob grins, and Stancy coiors sullenly.

"It wasn't altogether my fault," he mumbles, all his confidence and self-assurance vanished at the entrance of Sir Herrick.

"Fault!" says the major, with a gentle smile and a shrug of the shoulders. "If it comes to fault, I'm afraid my stupid man was as much to blame as any one. He must have been in the middle of the road. I've been a great mind to ask Hurstely to discharge him."

A faint smile curves Sir Herrick's lips, as he says to Paula, in a low whisper:

"That was nicely done, wasn't it? Of course his man was on the right side."

He says this in a whisper, but honest Bob blurts out bluntly—

"That wouldn't be fair, major; the man was all right enough."

"If you say so, my dear sir," responds the major, sweetly. "I will overlook it."

And Bob, utterly crushed by the deferential air of the compliment, bends over his plate.

"Yes, he is beautiful" murmurs Paula. "I was quite right."

Sir Herrick raises his glass, and looks at it with a curious smile.

"Wait! You'll admire him still more fervently," he says, in the same low voice. "He hasn't really had a fair opportunity of displaying his qualities yet."

The dinner goes on; it is really wonderful how the cook has managed to produce so many courses in so short a time; and the major's voice is heard to dulcet tones addressing May, whom all his attempts at drawing out, however, seem to frighten further into her shell.

The meal comes to an end at last, and the three girls file round the table into the drawing-room; and Mr. Palmer, ordering some special claret in, requests the gentlemen to draw nearer together.

Then indeed it is beautiful to see how the major plays his men. Very much as Paula had fished for her trout, he throws conversational flies for Mr. Palmer and Stancy, and, aided by the special claret, he succeeds in getting them to talk and display all their little weaknesses, all their little foibles, till Mr. Palmer grows as big and pompous as a bull-frog, and Stancy as conceited and self-sufficient as only a cad can be.

Bob—sturdy, single-minded Bob—drinks his claret in silence, and Sir Herrick leans back, drinking nothing, and as deaf to the soft voice of the major and boastful ones of the father and son as if he were out of hearing. In fancy, as he leans back with half-closed eyes, he sees that sloping bank of moss with the grand pines above it, and the beautiful girlish face so close to his own. It is Paula's voice he is listening to through the confused buzz of the ones actually speaking.

Had Bleeding, Itching Piles

And Suffered for a Year Before He Heard of Dr. Chase's Ointment—This Treatment Made a Complete Cure.

Mr. Will Sadler, Forest, Ont., writes: "I was troubled with bleeding, itching piles for about one year, and could not obtain any relief from my suffering until I procured Dr. Chase's Ointment. I was reading in a book one day about a man who had been completely cured by this treatment, so I bought a box of it and was entirely cured before I had used the whole box. Though I have never had any return of piles we always keep Dr. Chase's Ointment in the house, to be used for any kind of pimples or skin eruptions, and I feel as though I cannot speak too highly of this ointment."

The Londons Get Tighter Grip on the Championship

Defeat the Rockets in a Slugging Match—Game Awarded to McClarys.

The games in the City League yesterday were interesting, even if the one in the morning did have a bad wind-up, and the match in the afternoon was a mighty slugging bee. The result does not affect the position of any of the teams in the standing. The Londons won their game and got a tighter grip on the championship, and the McClary team was awarded a victory by the executive, which many thought it had no right to claim.

Strangely enough, the dispute came about in the ninth inning, when the official score showed the standing to be 4 to 3 in favor of the Blue Labels. Summerhayes got first on a single to center, the next man flew out, and Beaton drew a pass. Then Edwards came up and drove to shortstop. Beaton was retired at second. Edwards stole second, Richardson drawing a pass. Then Early knocked out a hot one and Summerhayes scored. The ball was returned to third promptly, and Richardson was caught coming from second. Edwards had come home, but there was a question whether he got to the plate before Richardson was retired, which made the third man out. The run was not credited in the official score, and this left the score tied. The McClary men protested that they had made the run, which gave them the game, and they were upheld by the executive. The game was one of the snappiest played this season, and by far excelled that of the afternoon for cleanness. Errors were scarce on both sides, and the two pitchers, Early and Smith, turned out gilt-edged articles of ball all through. The Blue Labels started their scoring in the first, when they picked out two runs. Hits by Mines and Stein started the work, and both men scored on an error, and Perkins' long drive to left, on which the batter was retired.

The McClary nine came up lucky in the third, two errors, a pass and a fielder's choice counting two runs, Taylor and Beaton, doing the scoring. Then in the fifth Edwards came home on a passed ball by Mines. It was a scratch run, and one the foundrymen shouldn't have been presented with. The Blue Labels, after the first inning went out in almost, one, two, three order up to the ninth. Very few of their men found Early. In the ninth Stein drew a pass and then Howell drove an easy one to third. Breen fielded the ball, but Beaton let it get past him, and both men were safe. Maxwell put out a pretty drive to left field and the two men scored. The side was retired immediately after.

The two runs by the McClarys in the ninth won them the game. The score:

A SLUGGING BEE.

Probably no greater surprise could have come, than the manner in which the two teams in the afternoon, went after each other. It seemed as if every man was a heavy hitter, and that Labor Day had some inspiration for ball players. The Londons hit in every inning, nineteen hits being made off the deliveries of Phillips and Jackson. Every man on the team had a hit or hits to his credit, and the batting averages will consequently be swelled. Up to the sixth inning the game was a pretty one. The errors were scanty and at the fourth inning the score was tied. In the sixth, however, the Londons got on a batting streak, which they kept up till the end. In the sixth the deciding stroke came, when the champions made an even half dozen tallies, clinching the victory. Then in the seventh three more were made and this seemed to make the Rockets recover themselves, for in the eighth and ninth they came up strong and succeeded in making seven runs, which brought the score much closer.

During the game Jackson replaced Phillips in the box, and in the eighth Sheere was taken out and Gibson was put in. The changes, however, did not put an end to the batting streaks. The score:

HEAVIEST BATTER OF WHOLESALE LEAGUE THIS YEAR WAS PERKINS

Henley, Also of Perrin Nine, Headed the Pitchers' List—The Averages.

The averages of the Wholesale League for the season just closed have been compiled by the official scorer, Mr. C. G. Moorhead, and in them will be found some figures of interest both to the players who participated in the series and the fans who week by week went to Springbank to watch the games.

The averages show the following to be the leaders:

Pitchers—Henley, of Perrins.

Individual Batting—Perkins, of Perrins.

Club Batting—Bennets.

Club Fielding—Perrins.

Individual fielding — Catcher Summers, Perrins; pitchers, Clark, Perrins; first base, Doidge, Whites; second base, Roberts, McClarys; third base, Maxwell, Bennets; shortstops, B. Clark, Perrins; left fielders, Cochrane, Bennets; center fielders, Woods, Perrins; right fielders, Leach, of Whites.

The averages do not include any of the games that were protested or thrown out, as these cannot be allowed. This will most seriously affect the standing of the Perrin team, which thus loses twenty hits made in games ordered to be played a second time. The White nine also lost thirteen hits and the McClary nine were deprived of seven hits.

The figures are:

TWO LONDONERS ON BISLEY TEAM

Capt Dinnen and Capt. McCrimmon Qualified in Aggregate at Rockliffe.

The Londoners who attended the annual matches of the Dominion Rifle Association at the Rockliffe ranges, Ottawa, have returned home. In every match in which they participated, the marksmen from the Forest City, as is invariably the case, made a very creditable showing, and carried away a fair share of the prize money.

Of course, with every man who goes to the Rockliffe matches, the greatest interest is centered in the grand aggregate match, for it is from the men who make the biggest scores in this event that the team to represent Canada at the Bisley ranges the following year is chosen. The thirty competitors making the highest figures are entitled to go on the team, and if any of them should find reason to withdraw the vacancy is filled by the next highest in the list. Of the first thirty men in the aggregate last week, the names of two Londoners appear. They are: Capt. Dinnen, of the First Hussars, who did so well at the Ontario rifle matches at Toronto, and Capt. McCrimmon made a total of 306, and stood The possible in the aggregate was 350, and by making 314, Capt. Dinnen stood pretty well up in the list. Capt. McCrimmon made a tota lof 306, and stood twenty-seventh. Lieut. Murphy, Major Hayes and Pte. Allin were also in the match, but experienced a little ill-luck and did not do as well as they were expected to.

This is the fifth time that Capt. McCrimmon has shot in the aggregate at Ottawa, and the third time that he has qualified for Bisley. Capt. Dinnen has shot three times in the same match, and has qualified for Bisley twice.

A remarkable thing about the shooting is the fact that of the men who went to Bisley this summer and tried for a place on the team next year, not one was successful. Staff-Sergt. Crowe, of Guelph, was the nearest to getting within the line, being thirty-fourth on the list.
