CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

CURE

Sick Headache and relieve all the troubles incident to a bilious state of the system, such as Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Distress after eating, Pain in the Side, &c. While their most remarkable success has been shown in curing

SICK

Headache, yet Carter's Little Liver Pills are equally valuable in Constipation, curing and preventing this annoying complaint, while they also correct all disorders of the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels. Even if they only cured

HEAD

Ache they would be almost priceless to those who suffer from this distressing complaint; but fortunately their goodness does not end here, and those who once try them will find these little pills valuable in so many ways that they will not be willing to do without them. But after all sick headache

ACHE

Is the bane of so many lives that here is where we make our great boast. Our pills cure it while others do not.

Carter's Little Liver Pills are very small and very easy to take. One or two pills make a dose. They are strictly vegetable and do not gripe or purge, but by their gentle action please all who use them. In vials at 25 cents; five for $1. Sold by druggists everywhere, or sent by mail.

DIANA WENTWORTH,

Or, The Professor's Daughter.

"Have you got everything she wants, Susan?" he asked, as his cousin began hanging the wet things on a clothes-maiden.

"I've got everything I could, John; I can do no more."

"Of course you can't. Why do you speak like that? Are you angry about anything."

"No; but John what made you bring her here?"

"I will tell you afterwards, if she gives me permission. She has had an unpleasant experience at the Abbey and will not return there."

"But her mother is there. People don't leave their mothers and all belonging to them in that way," said Susan, slowly.

"It is not an ordinary case. I quite approved of her decision and asked her to come here; she will stay here all night."

"But how did she get into the Keld road? Was she coming here?"

"Good heavens! no. She had lost her way. I cannot tell you now; you must trust me till to-morrow."

"And she will stay all night?"

"Of course; she could not go out again now. Will you give her your room? You can have mine; and there is a mattress on the floor of the little slip over the back kitchen that will do for me."

"I can have that. Do you keep your room."

"No; arrange it as I say."

"Very well," replied Susan; and then they heard Diana coming downstairs, and said no more.

She came in smiling at herself, and very quaintly did Susan's homely garments hang upon her. John made her take his own chair, and then said,

"It is our supper-time, Miss Wentworth. Will you join us?"

"If you wait a minute," said Susan, "I will make Miss Wentworth some tea."

"Do you want tea?" asked John.

"What are you going to have?" asked Diann.

"Porridge and milk, and bread and cheese."

"I will have porridge, too, please; I like it."

They drew round the table and ate together. Diana, in the peace and safety of the farm-kitchen, felt very happy, though in a dreamy, languerous way, which was the result of all she had just gone through. Susan watched her and John closely. She could not help admiring Diana's ease in these strange surroundings; and John's manner filled her with pride in him. He was so deferential to Diana, yet in no way humble; he did the honors to the homely fare with as much unconcern as if he were presiding at a royal banquet. There were no apologies. He had offered her his hospitality, and she had accepted it; there was no room for apologies. When supper was over and they drew around the fire again, John said,

"I have been thinking, Miss Wentworth, that you might like your mother to know you are in safety. I will walk over to the Abbey and let her know where you are."

"You are very kind," said Diana, with heightened color. "I do not think any one but my cousin Gertrude will be really anxious."

"Still, you owe it to them to let them know where you are."

"Yes, perhaps," she said, after an instant's reflection. "If you will go, I shall be very grateful to you; but please see my uncle; he is the right person, I think."

"I will see Mr. Meredith," he said rising, "and if you have any message I will deliver it; but first let me assure you that my house and myself at your command."

"I have no message, except that on no consideration will I go back to the Abbey. If you will be so good as to—to let me stay here to-night," she went on with some hesitation, "I will not trouble you longer. To-morrow I will go to a friend at Whitfield. For the rest—please act and speak as you think best; I know it will be right. It is very good of you to go; I wish it were not so wet."

He laughed at her concern, took his hat and coat from the peg where they hung, and set off, leaving the two women together.

Susan saw him go with terror. In spite of Diana's cordial manner, which she instinctively felt to be sincere, she was overwhelmed by Miss Wentworth's whole personality. She wondered what she could find to talk about, and she expected to find the time of John's absence very long indeed. She had taken up her sewing again, and so sat with her eyes bent upon it, racking her brains for something to say. Diana saved her the trouble by speaking first.

"Please put down your sewing, Miss Garthwaite. You make me feel idle, and yet I can do nothing."

"My name is not Garthwaite," said Susan as she laid aside her work, feeling that she would best please John by complying with Diana's wishes.

"I beg your pardon," said Miss Wentworth; "I fancied it must be, as you are Mr. Garthwaite's cousin."

"Not any more than yours is Meredith."

Diana started at the name of Meredith, which might have so easily been hers that afternoon, and she went on rather hurriedly.

"What is your name? What must I call you?"

"My name is Morrison; but call me Susan—everybody does."

"Susan Morrison," repeated Diana; "it is a pretty name. Tell me something about your cousin, Susan. Have you lived here always. Was he always what he is now, so good and brave? Do you know that this is the third time he has come to my help when I was in great need?"

"He is always good," replied Susan, rather sententiously; "and I have lived here all my life."

"Are these his books?" asked Diana again as she stretched out her hand to some book shelves in the corner between the fireplace and the window.

Susan answered in the affirmative, and Diana rose and went to the book-shelves, where she stood for some time looking at the books, turning over the leaves, reading passages to herself, and smiling from time to time. While she was so engaged, Susan looked at her often, and each time she looked the beautiful face appeared more beautiful, softer, more womanly. A little sadness overspread it at last, which grew until the whole face was overshadowed, and with a sigh Diana closed the book in which she had been reading and returned to her chair, where she sat in silence, looking into the fire. Presently she stretched herself upright and looked across to Susan; saying,

"Susan, it is good to be here; don't you think so?"

"It is my home," replied Susan.

"Yes, but that is not the reason. There is something in the atmosphere. The people who live here spread something of their spirit through the place, so that when they are away they seem to be still here. It feels like my home, too."

She was speaking in a low, dreamy tone, more to herself than to Susan. Perhaps she had forgotten Susan's presence, and would have been startled if she had spoken. But Susan had no intention of speaking—she could not. Diana's last words had sent a thrill through her heart which took away all her breath, and opened her eyes, so that she said within herself,

"She loves him as well as he loves her. It is only a question of time now, when they understand each other."

Nothing in the World Like It.

Nothing can equal Polson's NERVILINE as a remedy for internal, local, or external pains. It is the strongest, therefore the best. Nerviline penetrates at once to the source of disease, and affords immediate relief. C. B. Allinson & Co., druggists, Picton, speaking of Nerviline state: "Our customers speak of it in the highest terms." Nerviline nerve pain cure will always command the praise of all who use it. Nerviline is an honest remedy. Always sure, and prompt to relieve, and therefore is the best remedy to keep in the house. Buy a sample bottle, which costs but 10 cents, and be convinced that Nerviline is the best pain remedy in the world. Sold by druggists and country dealers.

CERTIFICATES OF STRENGTH AND PURITY

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC ANALYST.
MONTREAL, Sept. 9, 1887.
To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal.
GENTLEMEN,—I have personally taken samples from a large stock of your Granulated Sugar, "REDPATH" brand, and carefully tested them by the Polariscope, and I find these samples to be as near to absolute purity as can be obtained by any process of Sugar Refining.
The test by the Polariscope showed in yesday's yield 99.90 per cent. of Pure Cane Sugar, which may be considered commercially as ABSOLUTELY PURE SUGAR.

O.N.F. Baravena Milk Food for infants and young children is the best food next to mother's milk in the world. Thousands testify to this. It is cheap, pure, and will please mother and child.
O.N.F. Prepared Pea Flour and other hygienic foods are specially made by this company.
O.N.F. Medals, Diplomas and First Prizes are awarded our National Foods and Choice Breakfast Cereals at every exhibition where they have been shown for six years past.
O.N.F. These are the foods for all people. They are as healthy as fruit and delicious.
O.N.F. If your grocer or druggist does not keep them ask for them and they will get them for you.
