"Messes I Have Been In" Told by Stewart Lyon

Canadian Troops in France Dine in All Manner of Mess-Rooms and Under Varied Circumstances; Meals in the Front Line Trenches and in Rear of the Lines

Canadian Press Correspondence by Stewart Lyon.

Canadiann Field Headquarters, March 23.—"Messes I have been in," is perhaps a somewhat suggestive title for what follows, but when it is explained that in every case I got into the mess through the invitation of the senior combatant officer connected therewith, the blamelessness of the Canadian press correspondent will be apparent.

There are many sorts of messes at the front and behind it. There is the mess dignified of the corps or the division where the "brass caps," if lucky, may have table covers, initialled napkin rings, an electric bell to summon the waiter, the morning's Times to furnish material for after dinner conversation and for environment perhaps the salle-a-manger of some fine old house that has been left uninjured by strange oversight of the barbarians during their temporary occupation, or has been hit in a few non vital snots by projectiles. The facade of one place where the afternoon tea habit is now being cultivated is pierced in but one snot by a shell. The result is much like that produced in the fact of an otherwise charming lady by the absence of a front tooth.

That particular shell pursuing its study of the interior dropped into the dining room and did so little damage there that the beautiful old Chinese pottery in a case on the wall remains undisturbed. The glass in the windows of the room has been criss-crossed with strips of paper so that it will not be broken by the vibration of artillery fire.

Under such conditions an officers' mess is rather a pleasant place even when the enemy with entire lack of consideration, is sending over "big stuff" at dinner time, thus forcing the gentlemen just back from leave who is telling of what he had to eat at the Savoy last night under the food regulations, to raise his voice unduly, when he declares that the mess chef, a pastry cook in civilian life will soon have the London fellows "beaten to it."

But it would be doing wrong to the 'Brass caps' of the staff to leave the reader in ignorance of the fact that most of them have had experience of life in the trenches and know the difference between paradise and no man's land.

By way of contrast with the dignified mess behind the lines, here is a rough sketch of another close up to the front. The mess room is an iron hut of circular form hid in an excavation on the side of a hill. Historic ground lies all around. There are but two officers in this isolated artillery post, the nearest to the enemy and in the mud floored, sandbag roofed hut they direct the operations of their battery as well as eat. A single candle stuck on an empty cigarette case gives a faint light which is augmented in honor of the visitor to the mess by the addition of a second candle. A primitive fireplace at one end of the little hut has been contrived out of netting used in trench making and a few bricks from an adjacent rubbish heap that was formerly a village. A fire is smouldering in the improvised grate and as the senior combatant officer stirs it up Rembrandtesque lights and shadows fill the little hut. Three chairs, a rather rickety table made of rough planks and covered on top with oilcloth, indicate fastidious taste. The handle of a broom depending from a couple of iron links and provided with S links here and there makes an admirable hall rack. There are a few official records and some letters awaiting censoring in a little cupboard. That is the sum total of the mess furniture.

While we await the result of the instructions to have lunch for three the senior officer who was not very long ago a practical science student at a Canadian University and his junior, another Canadian explain the flight of shells with practical illustrations.

"Here comes one now," says the demonstrator as the sound of a projectile travelling overhead is heard.

"That is an eight-inch shell, the Bosche is using against some of our gun positions over the hill. Would you like to see it burst?"

A safe reserved seat encouraged me to say "yes." The door was thrown open and we watched the shells strike and explode on and over the hill Each shell has its own sound and the trained ear of the artillerymen identifies them all. The bigger high explosive projectiles of the enemy have the conventional "boom," but the 5.9's have a sharp crackling sound unlike any other.

The most interesting information given during the demonstration was that a shell coming straight in line and therefore highly dangerous, can be readily distinguished from one passing a short distance on either side. "You will often see a group of men engaged in conversation while under shell fire," said the senior combatant officer, "pause for a minute when the first whirr of an approaching shell is heard and then go on with their talk quite unconcerned. Their cultivated sense of sound has told them that the shell is to one side or the other.

Some authorities argue that the straight on shell is not heard till it passes. My own very limited experience is against that theory for I assuredly heard a 5.9 that burst straight ahead and about twenty-five yards short of me a few days ago.

No more informing half hour have I spent at any mess than while we ate our meat and vegetables and rounded up the meal with some sago and tea from a tin mug. Like a good many other Canadians over here the young artillerymen are trying to finish a difficult job not to embark on a career, but they are as keen as if they intended to spend the balance of their lives as big gun experts.

One of the duties laid upon officers is that of censoring the letters of their men.

A few words about another mess I happened into recently will help the reader in Canada to realize how varied are the experiences of both officers and men. Coming up from comfortable rest quarters where it had been for over a month, a Canadian brigade found itself in a little village near the trenches where almost the only shelter was in the cellars of partially destroyed houses. In a ruin more pretentious than its fellows the officers' mess was located. In one corner the sky was visible. The floor was of mud. Some hastily gathered bricks hedged about a fire, the smoke from which took its own untrammelled way upward— when the wind permitted. The utter desolation of the hole was relieved by crayon drawings on the plaster of the walls. There was one amazing life-size half-length portrait of a Scots officer wearing a glengarry, the bulbuous nose with a flick of red emphasizing it and the general appearance of the cartoonist's victim told thes tory as plainly as if the sketch had been labelled "the morning after."

There were other caricatures by the same artist—of a monocled officer with a retreating chin and of some French ladies done after the style of la vie Parisienne. But none of them were up to the high standard of the bibulous Scot. I wonder if genius was rewarded by confinement to a cellar billet or whether the lampoon followed in the train of something of that sort. The temporary mess of the — Mounted Rifles was the oddest combination of squalor and artistic expression I have yet seen.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS USED TEN YEARS

Mrs. W. J. Wilson, Carp, Ont., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for the last ten years and can highly recommend them for babyhood and childhood ailments. My baby boy was very delicate; in fact we never thought he would live but thanks to the Tablets he is now a fine healthy boy." Baby's Own Tablets should be kept in every home where there are small children. They regulate the bowels and stomach and never fail to cure the minor ills of the little ones. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

young American, believed to be a Texan, who enlisted in a Canadian battalion, and carried the stars and stripes on his bayonet up the Vimy heights, and who fell wounded in the action—the first American to carry the flag of his country as a belligerent in the European war—I am authorized by the senior Roman Catholic chaplain of the Canadian corps, to state that he heard the story in an ambulance from the lips of wounded man himself. The case was a stretcher one—that is, a serious wound—and the wounded man expressed the hope that he would survive and return to the United States to tell his story. The senior chaplain did not take the name of the man, who was perfectly rational when he made his statement. If he survives, he will no doubt make his identity known.

Is Good Advice Cheap?

Will the time-worn fallacy that "All advice is cheap" stand investigation?

Isn't good advice a very expensive luxury—when it isn't followed?

Just six weeks ago we advised

NEWRAY AS AN INVESTMENT

In the meantime the shares have advanced in value from $1.15 to $1.46, and the trend is still undeniably upward.

If you failed to act on our advice, you lost money—in other words our advice wasn't cheap at all—so far as you were concerned.

We believe NEWRAY is a better buy to-day than it has ever been in the past. Coming developments—of which we have knowledge—warrant much higher prices.
