Of Interest To Women

CAN YOU DRESS IN SIX TINY MINUTES?

It's Easy If You Have a System, Says Carrie De Mar.

MISS DE MAR

A woman should dress in six minutes.

That, laggards in lingerie, is the speed limit fixed by Carrie De Mar, musical comedy star, who beats that record by five and a half minutes, when she puts on the costume in which she is here pictured.

But the six minute limit doesn't involve anything so simple as that. It means the whole programme from the talcum powder overture to the glove button finale.

"In the beginning," says Carrie, "a woman should make up her mind just what she is going to wear."

No time limit was specified for that process.

"Then she should assemble in one place all the garments she expects to put on.

"Lack of system is the great time waster that and doubtless vanity.

"Strings constitute the balance of power in most feminine clothes nowadays, and the more nimble fingered you are with the sailor's knots the more time you are going to save."

Correspondence

Edited by Cynthia Grey.

Dear Miss Grey—Will you tell me how to take care of palms?

—MRS. R. E.

A.—Use plenty of water and have pot well drained. Keep leaves clean by sponging. Syringe under side of leaves to prevent thrips. Changes of temperature, drafts and coal gas destroy palms.

Red Ants.

Dear Miss Grey—How can I get rid of red ants? WORRIED

A.—Many ways of exterminating red ants have been tried, but what proves a success in one place will not always succeed elsewhere. Sprinkle infested places with pennyroyal, powdered cloves, powdered borax, oil of cedar, camphor gum, green walnut shells, wormwood, or anything with a tar odor. Soak nests of ants with kerosene.

To Polish Piano.

Dear Miss Grey—Please tell me how to polish my piano so that the gloss will look brightest. MRS. S. A.

A.—If the piano case is of mahogany, simply wash it with a chamois and warm water. Clean a case of other wood the same as fine furniture. Mix equal parts of alcohol, linseed oil and vinegar, apply with a clean cloth and polish with another. Clean carved work with a stiff paint brush.

It's Her Move.

Dear Miss Grey—Should I offer to shake hands with a gentleman or should I wait for him to offer his hand? MISS E. A. B.

A.—It is the woman, not the man, who offers to shake hands upon an introduction.

Ready For Croup.

Dear Miss Grey—Please give me a remedy for croup. MOTHER.

A.—A cold compress is almost a certain cure.

Tear a broad strip of flannel and fold up each side, making three thicknesses. It should then be wide enough to fit snug up and low down over the throat, and should be just long enough for making a lap to hold the pins.

Tear a piece of cotton cloth which will make four folds a trifle narrower than the flannel. Soak the cotton in very cold water and wring it so that it will not drip. Lay the flannel over the wet cloth, and pin both about the child's neck, flannel side out, using small safety pins.

As a rule the child will be sleeping quietly in less than half an hour.

Wedding Expenses.

Dear Miss Grey—Who should pay the expenses of the wedding, the father of the bride or the groom?

—RAY E.

A.—The groom pays for the flowers for the bride and her maids, for the carriage for himself and the bride, and for the best man and the ushers. He of course buys the license and the ring, and gives the fee to the clergyman. It is the duty of the best man to hand the minister his fee, usually a piece of gold in an envelope. The bride's parents pay the other wedding expenses.

Recipes

For the brown bread, which is made at home the day before, stir three cups of water into a mixture of two and one-half cups of Indian meal, one and one-half cups of graham flour, and one-half teaspoon of salt to form a batter; the amount of water may vary, as meals differ in absorptive power. Dissolve one yeast cake in a little lukewarm water; add to it the batter with one-quarter cup of sugar or molasses. Let rise in a warm place in a greased tin, steam for two and a half hours, and finish with half an hour in the oven, or else steam an hour longer. It is best cooked in round coffee tins.

The bacon is a delicious relish, but adds more to the expense of the meal than to its nutritive properties, and can be omitted without disturbing the balance of the menu.

Adjustable Flounces.

Adjustable flounces to petticoats are not entirely new, but until recently it has not been easy to buy ready-made these convenient transformations. Now however, one can indulge in a close fitting jersey top, widely ruffled half a dozen flounces, and with a second ruffles to button on. One of these flounces can be of soft satin, finely knife pleated at the bottom, a third of changeable silk. These flounces are finished with a buttonhole band, which allows to button upon are placed on petticoat. In this way it is easy to keep up remnants of dress lining and have a flounced to match each gown. Such a petticoat is convenient for the traveler as the flounces fold into a much smaller space than the same number of skirts.

Care of the Piano.

A music lover finds that her piano keeps in the best condition, musically speaking, when it is in a well ventilated room, with the temperature not above 68 degrees. Heat means not above worse than cold (provided the cold be not damp), and if the instrument is kept in a dry, cool room it retains its tune in a remarkable manner. Constant dry furnace heat seems to be the worst thing. Sometimes when her piano was getting out of tune she had it tuned, but a correct and enjoyed admission of pure outside air, not damp, would restore it to tune.

BIG HATS NOT ALL GONE YET

New York, April 24.—For dress wear, hats are as wide as ever. They seem not to be governed by any decree limiting the height of the crown or shape of the brim, though the ones that are wider from side to side than from front to back are in the large majority.

The shapes of the big hats include such widely diversified styles as the Gainsborough, Rembrandt, Napoleon, sailor, etc. A very original mode shown at an opening of French millinery flared wide at the left side and had a high crown. It was of coarse straw, trimmed solely with a band embroidered in Bulgarian colors, that stretched straight across the front from side to side. Some of the large hats measure full twenty-four inches across, and for contrast there are toques of quite diminutive size. Some of the smaller hats are little smaller in the head size than they were, but the majority fit close around the head, as they have been doing the last year.

THE CABLEMAN

BY WEATHERBY CHESNEY.

Varney turned with a comically two fold face to his friend, and Scarborough, as soon as he judged that Val B. Montague was out of earshot, burst into a roar of laughter.

"You asked me just now how I have spent the last two years," said Varney. "Now that so've met the man, you have a faint idea of what it means when I say in the company and service of Val B. Montague. But he's a good sort, mind you."

"He is always like this."

"More or less, yes. The degree of absurdity varies, but he's never ordinary. During the last six months we quarrelled, I daresay I was a bit mulish, and I didn't like his meddling, then I got to understand him, and for the last year and a half I've been his right hand man. We had a row royal this morning, and you see now little he heeds me."

"He said you were a coward he had been dragging to his lessons," said Scarborough, laughing.

"Yes, it is his way. When he abuses you in company, you know that you are forgiven, and you start after him the old feeding. He his latest of making an example of Mona de la Mar was worse of our dispute this morning. She said she wasn't going to perform today, that she wanted a holiday, and that Fritz the head horse, agreed to. I didn't in the least mind her not performing, but Montague brave to bluster so I backed her up, and said I wouldn't perform, either. I make a point of standing up to him whenever he starts in to play the bully. I fancy that's partly why we's such good friends."

"A bit monsterous of the lady, wasn't it?" said Scarborough.

"Oh, very," agreed Varney, "but the point was that Montague couldn't be the point. He objected to a free fight on principle in a system, you see. We allow him to wax a free tongue as a rule, but this was outside the limits. See?"

"I see," said Scarborough, "that you are an interesting cow, and I want to hear more."

"Then lead the way to your restaurant. And if you're in funds, let it fizz!"

"Fizz it shall be. Come along."

Clifford Varney told his tale, picking up the thread where he and Scarborough had been pulls together at an army rendezvous near Halifax. Both had been working with no great enthusiasm, they admitted nothing, for the entrance exams. and studies, and Varney was a telegraph man and Scarborough was a clerk perforce. There were things in this which called for explanation, for neither knew exactly the reason why the other had given up his career. Varney's explanation was easy and ordinary. He had failed in the examination, and the uncle who was paying for his education refused to allow him to try again.

"I don't think he was really sorry," said Scarborough. "He had the notion that I had brains, if I cared to use them, and he didn't think that Val was a useful field for the exercise of his profession. Good man, Val, you see, and has a prejudice against what he calls a butterfly life. That was before the war. He's a bit more ready to admit that a soldier may be a man too. I wanted me to go into the ranks."

"You struck at that?"

"Yes."

"And then?"

"Well, then, as I didn't take what he offered, he told me to do the best I could with myself. The only thing he insisted for was that it should be something in which I could earn a definite salary, and he promised to add three sovereigns to every one that I saved at the end of a year."

"Not a bad arrangement, either," exclaimed Varney.

"Not a very good one for me. The dear old man is by way of being religious, but he continues to preach the gospel of Mammon, and in a way that makes converts. He's be home with perfect ease, though. If anyone pointed that out to him. Now, how about you, Fritz?"

"Wait a bit," said Varney. "What made you change the subject so?"

"For one thing the exam. was easy for another, I'm rather keen on electricity and electrical machines, for a third, it seemed a good way of seeing a little bit of the world. Curiously enough, the service is rather crowded with men who joined as I intended to be something else. Somebody has dubbed us the legion of the plowed, but on the whole, I think we're rather good sorts. I'm quite satisfied with my life and with my colleagues."

"The other man's explanation of his position was equally simple. Scarborough was what he was because he had failed in an examination. Varney had never sat for the examination, because the misfortune or crime of others had thrown him suddenly on his own resources, and had changed his destiny from that of spending an allowance to that of earning a living. These two causes between them account for many a curious choice of profession.

"You remember the smash?" he asked.

"Yes," said Scarborough. "Carrington & Varney, stockbrokers everybody knew about it, but I never understood it."

"Few did, and I think the poor old governor died of it at last. He had trusted Carrington in everything and Carrington used him as a tool. The man was a thoroughbred blackguard."

"I understand. Why wasn't he brought to book?"

"Too clever. Slipped through the lawyers' fingers on a technicality and left his partner as the scapegoat. The poor old governor only either was ever trust in a scoundrel even the prosecuting counsel acquitted him of nothing more serious than an easy going incompetency. But the disgrace killed him. When things had not so straight as they ever would get, I went out to Indian Brazil, found that the family luck stuck to me in that it yoked me to another scoundrel, the man I was ranching with, cut him after a month, fell in with Val B. Montague in Rio, joined him, and because I found that he was top sawyer stuck to him. I had been with him a year when the news of the governor's death reached me, but I didn't go back. There was nothing to go back for, and, well, that's about all."

"What became of Carrington?"

For a moment Varney did not answer. Then he said slowly.

"Till today I knew nothing about him. Today two things have happened that make me suspect that he is in this island of San Miguel. Shall I tell you what they are?"

Scarborough was crumbling a piece of bread with nervous fingers. He knew what his friend was going to say, and he could not feel the same certainty as he had felt an hour ago that the suggestion was absurd. Elsa had told him that she felt a rush of shame when she heard the name of Page on his lips. Might this, after all, be the reason.

"Yes," he said, quietly.

"One is that Elsa Carrington was with you today," said Varney.

"Can you prove that to me?"

"I can tell you that I am sure. Three years ago I met her often at her father's house. She wore her hair in a pigtail then, and her frocks were short, but otherwise she has not altered much. Also, I can describe Carrington to you, and you can judge for yourself if he is the man you know as Page. He is about five feet seven, rather fat, and the skin hangs loosely over his cheek bones, as though he had once been much fatter. There is something wrong with one of his fingers, but I forget which."

Scarborough drew in his breath quickly, and looked hard at the crumbs he was making. He remembered that when Mr. Page played chess he always made the moves with his left hand. The last joint of the middle finger of the right hand was missing, and Elsa had once explained that her father had lost it from the bite of a horse when he was a boy.

"And the other thing?" he asked huskily.

"The other thing is that Mona de la Mar refused to perform tonight," said Varney.

"Why, how does she come into it?"

When he had [illegible] Scarborough's explanation of his reasons for thinking that Mona de la Mar did come into the story, Scarborough rose suddenly and said.

"Come, you get a bicycle and ride back with me to-morrow. I'd like to talk things over with you."

"Then stay and talk here, or better still let me show you every one's bicycle. It's a funny place. Will you come?"

"Yes," said Varney, [illegible]

He hired a bicycle in the town and rode back with Scarborough. They had their talk out, and by the time it was late, and Phil Varney stayed the night at the cottage Arthur. Next morning, while they were at breakfast, a note was brought to Scarborough. He opened it and read.

"Father is dead. I think he has been murdered. Come to me. Elsa."

That was all. Scarborough thought again of the cablegram. Was this the danger which the coming of the cablegram had brought? And the danger might not be over yet, though one victim had fallen. Elsa here, if might be in peril.

He got his bicycle and was started at once for the Cimenas. As he rode off a sudden thought struck him, and he called out to Varney.

"Find out what Mona de la Mar was doing last night, and what the business was which made her refuse to perform in the circus."

To Be Continued.

HOW TO PACK AWAY YOUR WINTER WEAR.

The task of packing away the winter garments, draperies and blankets is made much less unpleasant by using gasoline or benzine in place of the old-fashioned moth antidotes.

In the first place, go over everything that is to be put away and do the necessary repairing now, so that if cold weather comes sooner than expected they will be ready for use.

On a sunny, windy day, hang everything on the line out of doors, and beat good, then air for a few hours.

If you have been wise you have saved all the large paper boxes that came from the dressmaker's, the clothier's and the cleaner's in which all winter wear may be packed.

If possible take a well-lighted room on a bright day in which to do your packing, so that the gasoline fumes may quickly evaporate.

Upon an ordinary kitchen table, spread a garment, dip a whisk-broom in the gasoline and sprinkle well. Turn it over and treat the other side the same way, then fold neatly. When doing the coats, put them in boxes long enough to avoid doubling across the length. In folding trousers, keep them in the original creases.

As moths have no liking for printer's ink, newspapers are fine for box linings, allowing some to cover each article packed.

Too great care cannot be given furs. A very good investment is a small cedar cest in which furs may be stored for years to come.

A ROUGH PASSAGE

SS. Campania Has Terrific Seven Days' Battle With the Atlantic.

New York, April 23.—"Campania, Campania," flashed over the Atlantic for 20 hours without response spread increasing alarm for a liner the length of the Atlantic coast until the call was answered yesterday.

A few hours later the vessel crept to her dock, bringing a heavy eyed crew and tales of seven days and nights of the roughest weather the liner had ever encountered.

She left Liverpool on April 15 and ran into a gale at once. The high seas, lashed by gales, swept over the ships decks and the bridge, drenched the officers quarters, found their way to the dining saloons and smoking rooms, battered the superstructure and funnels and tore away a portion of the wireless apparatus.

For thirty hours the vessel was out of touch with the world, and officials of the Cunard line were preparing for the worst when the oft repeated call was answered.

The apparatus was repaired when the Campania was off Sandy Hook.

HECKLED MR. FISHER

Minister at Montreal Speaks on the Reciprocity Issue.

Montreal, April 22. The campaign on behalf of the Government's reciprocity measure was carried into Westmount this evening, when about 500 people gathered to hear Hon. Sidney Fisher and Hugh Guthrie M. P.

The meeting was not in any sense a demonstrative one but there was much heckling, aimed particularly at the minister of agriculture.

Mr. Fisher took all this in easy manner, however, though at one time it developed into quite a catechism, and the troublesome questioner was shouted at and only saved from ejectment by the minister himself.

In answer to one question put to him as to why the Government did not present the question to the electors, Mr. Fisher replied:

"Just as soon as you want it you shall have the chance, but we do not propose to disfranchise a great number of people who after the census will have votes. We do not think that the present distribution represents fairly the whole country. It would be a national crime for the Government to dissolve and go to the country just in the face of a census and redistribution."

BACK TO PRISON

Atlanta, Ga., April 23.—The application for pardon of Thomas J. Stripling late this afternoon was denied by the governor. Stripling was formerly chief of police of Danville, Va., and was under life sentence for killing W. J. Cornett. He escaped from officers years ago and had been successful in business under an assumed name.

Governor Brown scored the "unwritten law," to which Stripling appealed for justification as anarchistic argument and reviewed Stripling's escape and subsequent career; said he found no reason to change the decision of the courts.

AGAINST THE MORMONS.

London, April 23.—Anti-Mormon demonstrations were held at Birkenhead and other provincial towns today. There was much excitement and a strong feeling was displayed against the Mormon propaganda, but owing to police precautions were were no disorders.

DAMAGED FERRY BOAT NEARLY RUN DOWN

Steamer Promise Escapes Path of C. P. R. Freighter.

Windsor, April 24.—Carrying a full load of passengers, mostly Windsor residents who work in Detroit, the steamer Promise, a ferry boat running between Windsor and Detroit, broke her steering gear in midstream Friday night on her 5:40 trip from the Woodward avenue landing to the Canadian side and narrowly averted a collision with a C. P. R. freighter while picking her way to her destination.

The accident happened after the ferry boat was well on her way and caused the captain to leave his post to oversee the operating of the rudder by hand. The boat made her way up stream and then drifted until the Windsor landing was reached. It was while drifting that the collision nearly occurred.

A panic was avoided among the passengers, who were quietly told of the trouble. Traffic on the system was hindered for a considerable time.

THE CAMORRA TRIAL

Never an Idle Moment in Court at Viterbo.

Viterbo, Italy, April 22.—There is no idle moment in the trial of the Camorrists. The auditors never know what to expect, but they crowd every available place in the court of the assizes daily, fully assured of some sort of entertainment.

Today it was Vincenzo Avolce, the butcher who disputed the law with the judge; Antonio Princo, the seller of tortoise shells, frankly expressed the hope that he would get some free advertising out of his misfortune; and Maria Stendardo "the Beauty of Naples," who chose imprisonment rather than betray the man she loved, that were the principal performers in this strange mixture of comedy and tragedy. The two men are charged with being present at the meeting of Camorra leaders at the Alda Tavern in Bagnoli on May 29, 1906, when Gennaro Cuocolo was condemned to death, the state being awarded just now chiefly with those accused of formulating the plot resulting in the murder of Cuocolo and his wife.

Avolce is a handsome man and attracted much attention. He spoke like a scholar with surprising effect. Avolce made the usual unqualified denial of guilt.

INVADED CHINATOWN.

New York, April 22.—Nearly all Chinatown attended church last night at the Chinese mission to see and hear fourteen women school teachers from Toronto, who conducted the services. For two hours and a half, the Orientals sang and participated in the services as never before, and at the conclusion of the meeting the superintendent declared that the entire section would be converted if the teachers conducted the services for a week.

JUDGE DEFIES THREATS.

Chicago, April 21.—"Blackhand" bombs and threats have no terrors for Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis. In spite of "warnings" he today fined Gianna Alongi, 26 years old, $1,000, and ordered him imprisoned on the federal pen of Fort Leavenworth for five years for writing "Blackhand" letters.

Letters which Judge Landis has received have threatened him with death unless he released Alongi.

EXPLOSION AT ST. LOUIS

St. Louis, Mo., April 22.—An explosion of a tank at the plant of the Fell Oil Company here this morning injured a number of persons, some fatally, it is believed. Early police reports were that a number of bodies were found near the plant.
