AT OSGOODE HALL.

The City of Toronto Gets Stuck Because of a Supply of Dirty Water for the Running of Elevators.

The Common Pleas Divisional Court, sitting as a second division of the Court of Appeal, has given judgment in Scottish Ontario Investment Company v. City of Toronto, dismissing, with costs, the appeal of the city from the judgment of Justice Robertson, deciding, upon a special case submitted, that the defendants had not a right to plead not guilty by statute, the action being for breach of contract, and not for a tort. The action is brought to recover damages sustained by plaintiffs by reason of the presence of sand and gravel in the water supplied by the city. The plaintiffs allege that their elevator in York Chambers, Toronto-street, has been damaged by the failure to supply pure water, as agreed. They allege that the city agreed to supply pure water in consideration of the payment of a water rate, and that the rate-payers of not guilty had been allowed, the defendants would have sought to avail themselves of the defence of want of notice of action and that the action had not been brought within six months from the alleged injury, and on other grounds now unavailable.

JUSTICES' JUSTICE.

The same court, in Regina v. Quinn, gave judgment quashing the conviction of defendant for assault. On 16th November, 1895, Gordon Rupert laid an information against defendant for assault, before James Clement, a Justice of the Peace for the united Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry. The complaint was heard before Clement, J.P., J. H. McMillan, J.P., and Patrick Jordan, J.P., and, after the evidence was taken, the case was adjourned in order that the Justices might get the opinion of Mr. Dingwall, County Crown Attorney, as to whether the assault was justifiable, having regard to sec. 53, Criminal Code. No day was named for giving judgment. The Crown Attorney wrote to Mr. Clement, saying that defendant should be fined or committed for trial. Mr. Clement then notified all parties, and on Dec. 2, 1896, the defendant and his solicitor went to Mr. Clement's house, but Mr. Clement and Mr. McMillan (Mr. Jordan was not present), after going over the evidence, were unable to agree, and again adjourned without naming any day for giving judgment. Subsequently, the Crown Attorney wrote to the Justices, requiring them to adjudicate upon the matter and make a return, and on April 13, 1896, Clement, J.P., and Jordan, J.P., met, and, without previous notice to defendant or his solicitor, inflicted a fine, with payment of costs, upon defendant. The court holds that the first adjournment without naming a day alone rendered conviction absolutely void, and quashes it, but makes the usual order protecting the Magistrates.

OF INTEREST TO RAILROAD MEN.

The Queen's Bench Divisional Court gave a very important judgment in Marshall v. Central Ontario Railway Company, upon plaintiff's appeal from judgment of Justice Rose at the trial, dismissing action brought to recover damages for wrongful dismissal and for slander. The plaintiff was a roadmaster of defendants of 54 miles of their road. On 16th May, 1895, a special train started to pick up ties on plaintiff's section. The plaintiff rode on the engine with the conductor of the train and the engine driver and fireman. At Rathbun the conductor or driver produced a bottle of whiskey, and various drinks were indulged in, and in consequence the plaintiff, the conductor and the driver were dismissed. The court holds that the plaintiff, in drinking whiskey, as and when he did, while on duty, conducted himself in a way inconsistent with the faithful discharge of his duty to defendants, and in a manner which was prejudicial, or likely to be prejudicial, to the interests of the defendants, and that they were justified in discharging him. It also holds that the plaintiff in so doing was concurring in the commission of a crime within section 263 of 51 Vic., ch. 29, and that the section applies as between servants or employes in a case of this kind.

NOTICE.

The Assizes at Cayuga will be held on Tuesday, the 4th of May, instead of Monday, the 3rd of May.

The Sky in February 1897.

Editor World: The marvels of the celestial world to be observed each evening during February are the variable, double, triple, quadruple and multiple stars of the constellation of the Bears, Great and Little Bears, the Dragon, Cephus, Cassiopleia, Perseus, Aries, Andromeda, Pegasus, Leo, Gemini, Berenice's Hair, Charles' Heart, the Great and Little Dogs, the Charioteer, Taurus and the giant Orion, with their curious clusters of stars and interesting nebulae, and the finest white regions of the Milky Way. The primary planets in evidence, easy for all to see, are Venus, Mars and Jupiter.

That which the stars teach us is incomparably finer, more marvelous, more splendid and more enchanting than anything we can dream of. Astronomy places itself above all other sciences by its direct interest, by its high importance and by its greatness; indeed, it is at the same time the science of the invisible and of the visible universe; of the material worlds and of souls, of space and of infinity, of time and of eternity. Space and time do not exist. Space is infinite, without being immense; duration is eternal without being long, as the stars are big, but small. God alone is truly great.

The mind and intelligence of the invisible sun, composing our visible sun, are in direct proportion to the magnitude and power of our star, queen of light and day, just as the soul in man. On the moon, to travelers to the celestial worlds, the sun would appear of the size of twelve hundred and seventy-nine thousand times a thousand earths (1,279,000), and of a weight equal to that of three hundred and twenty-four thousand terrestrial globes united in one.

In the midst of the splendor of sunny days and of the glory of starry nights, how delightful it would be to feel ourselves men of peace, citizens of the world and of heaven, with no cry of war, no menaces, no fortresses, no frontiers, no Cuban and Armenian butcheries, no shock of hostile arms, no fields of death, no mothers' sufferings, no fathers' malediction, no brothers' anger, no despair on the part of the betrothed and no children's terrors!

Why do we have kingdoms and republics, rich and poor, subjects and kings? And why not but one empire, one nation united as one man? Alas! we trembled with fright before the retribution, for when so many abominable crimes and frightful blasphemies go forth from the earth, let us ask, Who is the judge or the avenger? And we have for answer: God, the Great God of the Universe.

Director of the Westmount Astronomical Observatory.

AT THE ASSIZES.

A Verdict Against a Simcoe County Man for $500 in Favor of the Young Woman's Father.

In the Assize Court yesterday, Alex. Sydie, sued James M. Taggart of Pennville, in Simcoe County, charging him with having ruined the plaintiff's daughter. Miss Sydie and her sister gave evidence. A letter had been written by the girl to Taggart, in which she indicated a third party as the cause of her trouble. She, however, was able to produce a letter from Taggart to her, enclosing the draft of the letter, and asking her to write it out, so as to shield him. At the suggestion of Mr. Justice Street, the parties retired, and after a short discussion a verdict was given by consent for the plaintiff for $500 and costs.

Cause list for to-day: Huff v. Forest (part heard), Howarth v. Smith Wool Stock Co., Webster v. Dale, Radcliffe v. Grier, Hurlburt v. Clark, Fitch v. Mallory, Bingham v. Small.

HINTS TO SINGERS.

What Madame Melba Says Regarding Voice Culture.

Madame Melba, who is naturally recognized as a most competent authority on all matters dealing with voice culture, says that few persons realize how much is added to the beauty of the natural voice by proper cultivation. Here the difficulty begins. The pupil must have competent teachers, and here arises the first obstacle in the way of the average student. If practicable, apply to a competent singer to assist in this matter.

Insist upon it, however, that the teacher chosen shall be a vocal teacher. Do not select a person who teaches various branches of music "and singing." A good vocal teacher has studied the physiology and hygiene of the vocal organs and has devoted much attention to the study of correct tone production, breathing, vocalization and the many other departments connected with the technical side of his profession and will have given special study to the famous operas, oratorios and the sacred and secular music written for the voice. He will find that the branch of music he has chosen to master is too engrossing and too exacting to admit of his devoting a part of his time to any other. The pupil then must attempt to ascertain the acquired equipment of various teachers and select accordingly.

But even then they must not be safe. The only absolute criterion is the progress made. Submit yourself absolutely to your instructor, follow accurately all he or her instructions and if, after your lessons or practice times your throat has any feeling of weariness or strain, or should you find at the end of your first term of lessons that your powers are not increasing, that your voice is no stronger, your tones not firmer and your command over your voice not increased, there is likely to be some fault either with the method taught or with the teacher.

In Memory of John Harvard.

Harvard University is to place in St. Saviour's Church, London, three windows in honor of the founder of the institution. John Harvard was baptized in this church nearly 300 years ago, and the windows are to form a part of the general renovation and adornment that for some years have been going on in the church. The present structure was erected in 1208. In it James I. was married to Joanna Beaufort, and among those buried in it are Edmund Shakespeare, a player and brother to William; John Gower, who lived near the church, and was its principal benefactor; John Fletcher, the collaborator with Beaumont, and that other noted dramatist, Philip Massinger.

A Queer Discovery.

A Bowdoinham (Me.) man, who was rummaging around in the attic of his house last week, took up an old book which opened to a $5 gold piece. As the good husband should, he immediately went to his wife with the find; and, on that lady's turning over the leaves to a little more, a $5 greenback was disclosed. The book had been stored in the attic for nearly twenty years; and the father of the finder, on being told of the discovery, remembered that years ago, when he kept the book in his room, he at times, when he had a spare piece of money, deposited it between the leaves, and said he must have forgotten to take them all out.

Victoria's "Diamond Jubilee."

It is decided that the great anniversary year of Queen Victoria in England is to be called the "Diamond Jubilee." When the fiftieth year of her reign was celebrated in 1887 it was named Jubilee year; and apropos an amusing story is told of an old English lady dwelling on the outskirts of Dartmoor, who was asked, "Whatever is the meaning of this year Jubilee?" "Well my dear," she answered, "it is this way; if you've been married to a man fifty year, an' the man's alive, 'tis a goulden weddin'; if he's dead, 'tis a jubilee."
