ROLL OF HONOUR

Several thousand officers and employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company enlisted for active military duty with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, and the majority of them are now in Europe, bravely battling for Canada and the Empire.

As particulars of Army Reservists are not available, these lists of those who have given up their lives for their country, or been wounded in action, are necessarily incomplete, and do not therefore indicate fully the extent to which the Company's officers and employees have participated in the great struggle.

FIVE MEN SIGN ROLL OF HONOR

Recruiting for 115th goes steadily on — Last evening's meeting in Mill St. rooms.

ROLL OF HONOR.

115th Battalion.

Thomas L. Devlin, Brussels street.
Albert Dawes, Adelaide street.
Ronald C. Leonard, Cody's, Queens County.
Matthew Vilardi, Genoa, Italy.
Garrison Artillery, Halifax.
Frank A. Muckler, Brussels street.

Last night's meeting at Mill street was fairly well attended and several applications were received. M. E. Agar was chairman and the speakers of the evening were Judge Knowles and Col. Sturdee. Walter Dunlop acted as pianist. John Frodsham gave several selections on the autoharp and John Kelly and P. C. Johnson sang.

Judge Knowles was the first speaker. He said war is sometimes better than peace for there is a peace that tends to enervate and destroy the sense of righteousness and justice in a people; this present war has already taught us to live saner lives and to that extent has proved a blessing.

The Empire needs more men in order to be in a position to take the offensive which is the only way a decisive victory can be obtained. Every man who feels that his duty is to enlist should do so at once in order to get the necessary training in time to play his part at the finish.

Col. Sturdee said the thing for every man to consider is his duty in this matter. The government is treating the man who enlists as no private employer does ;it looks after him should he be sick or wounded, and takes care of his family if he be a married man. The men who go with the 115th will have a commanding officer second to none in Canada.

Hidden Strength of France So Brilliantly Revealed Since War Began Causes World to Marvel

Visitor Cannot Fail to be Impressed by Adaptability of People and Manner in which Nation is Throwing Whole Strength into the War.

Paris, Dec. 23—Everyone who visits France at intervals during the war must be impressed by the hardened resolve of the people, and the magnificent spirit of the army. "Nothing," said Mr. Lloyd George in September, "but the exercise of our whole strength will enable us to obtain the victory upon which so much depends." Of all the Allies France comes nearest to realizing this ideal. She is throwing her whole strength into the war, mobilizing all her resources, organizing every department of national life to sustain the business of war. It is the vital national industry.

The world has marvelled at the hidden strength of France, which has shown itself so brilliantly during the war. Even now, after sixteen months of strenuous effort, France has not come to the end of her resources, or the limits of her military strength. A great War Loan is now being floated, and is meeting with a wonderful response, but the careful peasant will still keep a nest-egg in his stocking to meet the next national demand. Early in the New Year the class of 1917 will be called to the colors—a quarter of a million young men eager to serve the nation; most of them of excellent physique, having come under the new passion for athletics and sport which in recent years has captivated the youth of France. In the meantime the new Minister of War is putting the whole manhood of the nation not yet in the battle-line through a small mesh, which will finally sift out the fit from the unfit, so that no man able to be in the trenches will be doing work which can be done by the less fortunate and less fit, or by women. No favoritism will be shown, no "ambusques" will be left.

One is struck by the adaptability of the French people, as well as by their self-sacrifice. When the war was declared, the old "rentiers," who had not done a stroke of work for years, the numerous ex-officials retired in France or returned home from French oversea possessions, all rushed forward, in spite of years and infirmities, offering their services to the nation. Ex-Colonial governors, retired administrators, who exercised great authority, resumed their old grade in the army, perhaps that of lieutenant or captain. You will find them working in Civil departments of the Ministry for War, supervising the distribution of allowances, and in other capacities.

Women and the War.

In the meantime, in spite of the mobilizing of her fit manhood, except those retained for munition work, France carries on. Industries are kept going, crops are sown, and the harvests reaped. The nation lives, and, very largely, within itself. No sacrifice is too great. Conventions are thrown to the winds; everything is subordinated to the one supreme purpose of winning the war. The chief national industry, agriculture, is carried on by women, old men, and boys. They cultivate the fields, attend the beasts, reap the harvests. The vintage in Champagne was brought in, within the sound of the enemy guns, chiefly by the work of women. You see the women driving huge wagons, cutting wood, cleaning the streets, and running practically all the shops.

Adaptability of the French people and their capacity to rise to the emergencies which war imposes on the nation can be seen in any business establishment. I visited the offices of the great national newspaper "Le Journal," conducted with so much public spirit by Senator Humbert, and noticed that the paper is produced chiefly by elderly men, women, and boys. The women are acting as printers' laborers, handling papers in the publishing offices, and assisting in all departments. Monsieur Humbert said that over 100 women were employed in the office at night. No restrictive factory laws or trade union rules are in force to limit temporary expedients which must be adopted in a war of existence.

The spirit of the people is an example to the world. The enemy is within fifty miles of the capital; it is as if the Germans were at Reading. Yet a superb calmness reigns in the city, a sublime confidence inspires the people. Paris is not so dark at night as London. It laughs at Zeppelins, but the Zeppelins and Taubes now give Paris no opportunity to show its disdain for them. The Paris around the inner boulevards, across the river in the official quarter, the business centres by the Bourse, and the Town Hall, are the chief points of activity. There has been increased activity since the successful advance in September. Shops are doing more business; most of the theatres are open, playing old favorites; music halls run revues and variety turns, but there is a fitting restraint in all the programmes, and a dignified touch in everything referring to the war. Cinemas are more numerous, more palatial than in London, and the charges are higher. They are well patronized, and showing all kinds of films, always including pictures of the Army in action, and just now are advertising the National Loan.

The Revival of Paris.

Paris is not, of course, her old self, but there is a liveliness about her boulevards, a bustling activity in the business quarters, and, in general, an animation which was lacking a short time ago. There are throngs in the boulevards in the afternoon, the big stores are doing good business; the small shopkeepers have plucked renewed courage with returning custom and have brightened their window fronts. Nearly all the shops in the Rue de la Paix have re-opened, and once more the double line of motor cars may be seen in that famous street almost any day between 5 and 7 o'clock while the Champs Elysees a little earlier is crowded with promenaders. Another sign of the revival of Paris is the remarkable run on the tea-rooms. between 5 and 6.30 the fashionable resorts for afternoon tea are crowded. As tea is more of a luxury in Paris than in London this may be regarded as another indication of the loosening of the purse-strings.

The explanation of this development of life in Paris is reflected in the demeanor of the Parisians themselves. Their serenity betokens an absolute confidence in the issue of the war, and a certainty that the worst is over. This feeling is unanimous, unquestioned, and undoubting.

There are shadows in the midst of all these scenes of recuperating Paris. There is the procession of bruised and broken humanity in the streets; men without legs, or with a loose sleeve which once held an arm; men with torn faces and bandaged heads; men who crawl along on crutches; men who wear patches to conceal missing eyes; most of them men who wear proudly on their breast the Military Cross or the Cross of the Legion of Honor. There is also that other spectacle in the streets, which subdues all that remains of color in the women's dresses—the mourning of the mother, the wife, the sister, or the daughter. Many thousands of the children of France have already laid down their lives for the nation, and, while mourning in the individual is less ostentatious than in pre-war days, black predominates in the dresses of the women. People look with sympathy at these mourners, and with pride at the men who, though broken and battered, have survived the ordeal of battle.

France looks confidently to the army to avenge the death of the victims who have fallen on the battlefield, and to drive the enemy out of the country. The French army is magnificent. The spirit which pervades all ranks is superb. There is a community of good fellowship among all ranks in the French army which is worth several army corps in fighting strength, as compared with the system of the lash which exists in the ranks of the enemy. There is a comradeship, a feeling of equality, of friendliness between officers and men, which is unmatched in any army in the world. The nearer to the front the men are the greater their confidence.—Staff Correspondence of London Chronicle.

CARD OF THANKS.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander McManus, of Lakeside, N. B., desire to thank their many friends both in the railway service and at large, for the contribution so generously made. Kindness of this nature strikes very nearly to the heart.

To all friends, and especially to Conductor H. G. Thompson most sincere thanks are due for their kindness and consideration.

SIEGE BATTERY MEN MARCH TO ROTHESAY

Entertained in College on arrival — Outing much enjoyed by participants.

One of the most enjoyable outings the members of the Siege Battery have yet experienced, took place at Rothesay on Tuesday evening and Wednesday forenoon. Some eighty men under command of Lieuts. Kerr and Fairweather left St. John shortly before six o'clock on Tuesday evening to march to Rothesay, reaching College Hill at nine o'clock. They were warmly welcomed by the people of Rothesay who had provided a bountiful hot supper which was waiting for the men when they arrived at the College dining room.

After the supper had been duly attended to, Rev. Mr. Hibbard extended on behalf of the people of Rothesay a hearty welcome to the visiting soldiers and invited them to come again as often as they pleased. Lieut. Kerr responded to this and thanks was also tendered to the ladies of Rothesay for their kindness by Lieut. Fairweather.

The gymnasium of the College had been fitted with mattresses, and the men after an enjoyable hour or two listening to a musical program, spent the night very comfortably. They had brought their own cook and supplies with them and yesterday morning breakfast was prepared in the College kitchen and served in the dining room following which the squadron went for a route march around Rothesay.

At one point on the way the men halted, photographs were made and all members of the detachment were treated to cigars furnished by the committee of ladies who had charge of the last patriotic undertaking in Rothesay. Dinner was also served in the college and soon afterwards the men, after having spent a very pleasant time, marched back to St. John.

The men under heavy marching order reached the city about four o'clock in excellent condition after the long tramp and once more returned to Partridge Island to continue their drill.
