LONDON PRESBYTERY.

The State of Religion is Discussed by Leading Clergymen

The Best Means to Raise Money for Church Work—The Doctrine of Systematic Giving Commended.

Monday at 3 p.m., in connection with the meeting of the London Presbytery in Park Avenue Church, a conference was held on "The State of Religion." Rev. Thomas Wilson occupied the chair, and Rev. James Ballantyne acted as secretary.

"The Discouragements and Encouragements of the Pastor" was the first subject, ably introduced by Rev. W. S. Ball, London township. Among the discouragements the speaker alluded to those of the world which might be expected from the nature of things, and incidentally it was pointed out that discouragements arise from ministers not attending prayer meetings when abroad, thereby showing a poor example; also from ministers in conversation speaking slightingly of prayer meetings. Neglect by Christians of Christian ordinances while at watering places was also poor encouragement to pastors at such points. Another discouragement was when elders and managers fail to uphold their pastors by remaining away from prayer meetings and refusing to take part in them. Still another discouragement was when men who ought to do so give no help in bringing others into the fold, or when superintendents and elders never speak a personal word for Christ.

Among the encouragements the speaker included success. To win even one soul is a success. Nothing keeps up a minister's heart like the winning of souls. The prayers and active sympathy of church members is a great encouragement. When men and women share in the work or spreading the knowledge of Christ, it is an encouragement. But the greatest encouragement is a strong faith in God, and this always affords solace to ministers in dark times.

Among those who took part in the discussion were Messrs. Proudfoot, J. A. Murray, Roger, Cook, Gordon, Cameron, Henderson, Clark, Ballantyne, McCallom, Thompson and others. Among other discouragements mentioned were the love of the world, love of riches and excitement of mind through the rush of the day. One speaker complained that parishioners did not send word of sickness in their homes, and then sometimes complained if the minister did not call.

CHURCH CONTRIBUTIONS.

The best means for raising money for church work in congregations was introduced by Rev. Mr. Sawers, of Westminster, who mainly advocated the weekly offering system. It is considerably in vogue in city churches already, but is not regarded so workable in country parts; though why it should not be can scarcely be understood where markets are so near and change so convenient. But the envelope system is only tentative, and back of it must be inculcation of the true view that all wealth belongs to God. Education is needed as to responsibility for the talent of wealth. Ministers must give themselves, for precept without example means nothing. The ideal way of the future was to have one sufficient fund for all purposes kept full by the educated conscience of the people. An interesting discussion followed, and in closing the debate Mr. Sawer strongly pressed the doctrine of systematic giving and suggested how the doctrine might be made a practical reality.

Evening Session.

The first subject of the evening was introduced by Rev. Geo. Sutherland. "The Importance of home training and its Influence on the Church" was the theme. Parents should command their children and require obedience. Children should be personally trained, and the duty should not be delegated to Sabbath school teachers.

In the subsequent discussion of this subject it was observed that fathers should not allow responsibility to rest solely on mothers. Pastoral visiting often was allowed to degenerate into mere calls. Boys and girls should be trained to take part in family prayer. One speaker thought there were too many Sabbath services to crowd out home training.

VACANT FIELDS IN WINTER.

The question, "How can we supply during the winter fields left vacant by the removal of students?" was introduced by Rev. F. Ballantyne in a clear and descriptive address. His remedy was to make it obligatory on every young preacher to spend a full year in the mission field before settling down into a regular pastorate. Rev. Mr. Ball made the suggestion that if some means could be provided to secure the services of our regular pastors for a three-months' help in the mission fields, say once every six or seven years, it would be useful in every way and of vast service to embryo preachers.

The conference throughout was interesting and helpful.

Morning Session.

The Presbytery met in First Presbyterian Church at 9 a.m., Mr. Henderson presiding. After devotional exercises the clerk read the minutes of last regular meeting in St. Thomas in July, and special meetings in Hyde Park and Aylmer, which were confirmed.

The moderator ruling that in cases where representative elders had not been reappointed their commission expired, the roll was constituted for the ensuing year.

On motion Rev. Dugald Currie, of Glencoe, was appointed moderator for the ensuing six months.

Committees for the examination of session records were appointed by the moderator.

A report from Knox Church, St. Thomas, stated that the manse had been disposed of for $4,500; that the amount had been applied to the church debt, and asked the approval of the Presbytery on such action. The Presbytery, on motion, approved the action of the congregation.

A lengthened discussion took place upon the method of appointing delegates to the General Assembly. A motion and two amendments were made. The amendment by Rev. Mr. Munro affirming the principle of rotation in the selection of delegates was carried, and the matter of applying that principle was referred to a committee to report at the afternoon session.

The moderator read a circular from the convener of the Home Commission Committee of the General Assembly, stating the amounts required from the London Presbytery for the ensuing year for home missions was $2,300.

A resolution was carried instructing the Home Missions Committee with the treasurer of the Presbytery to issue a circular to the sessions within the bounds, acquainting them with the estimated sums required from the different congregations for the home mission and augmentation fund.

The applications for augmented congregations within the bounds for the expiring six months were read and on motion of Rev. A. Henderson passed.

The treasurer was granted authority to pay expenses of conveners of Presbytery committees.
