Just Impediment!

By Richard Pryce,

AUTHOR OF "AN EVIL SPIRIT," "THE UGLY STORY OF MISS WETHERBY," ETC.

"That's a lovely girl, isn't she?" he said. "I wish she was my cousin."

"What do you mean?" asked Rutherford. Mrs. Hartley was watching his face.

"She's Jackey's cousin. Devilish pretty girl, too. What is she, Jackey—a milliner?"

He went back to the piano as he spoke. Rutherford's face wore an odd expression. He leant forward in his chair and spoke low.

"Do you mean to say that is a relation of yours?"

His voice did not sound naturally in his ears, and the hand that held the photograph shook.

"Why?"

"I ask you a question."

"What should I have said so to Billy for if it was not true?"

"That I can't say," said Rutherford; "but it is not true."

"It is true. What do you mean, Lord Rutherford?"

"It is a lie," he replied with sudden heat. "The thing is monstrous! You wanted to make Billy think that you had smart connections. Look here, I insist upon hearing the truth. I—I—have met—I know Miss Wilton. I insist upon your telling me where you got this."

Hartley played on noisily. There was a dangerous light in Rutherford's eyes. Afterwords he was ashamed of having lost his temper.

"Why shouldn't I have my cousin's photograph?" she asked.

"Miss Wilton is not your cousin."

"She is my cousin. You can insist as you jolly well like?"

Rutherford took up an envelope that chanced to be lying upon a table at hand, and he wrote upon it the name of Mary Anne Smith. He handed it to her in silence and watched her face.

"How did you know?" she said in a low voice, and with suppressed anger.

"You forget," he said quietly, "that you used to know my aunt, Lady Heron."

He saw her set her teeth. With an effort she mastered herself.

"I'll tell you the truth if you won't tell Bill," she said. "He doesn't know. I couldn't bear him to know."

"Well," said Rutherford. He had, of course, no intention of telling Billy.

"Very Well," said Mrs. Hartley sullenly. "You're quite right; she is no relation of mine. Does that satisfy you? You've been rude enough, anyway——"

"I have," he answered, "and I am sorry for it."

"And all this comes of my being kind to a girl I'd never seen before," said Mrs. Hartley unappeased. "She sent me her photograph in return. I congratulate you on your friend, Lord Rutherford. I am glad to say I've got no friends who walk about Piccadilly at twelve o'clock at night."

CHAPTER VII.

LORD RUTHERFORD AT HOME IN KNIGHTSBRIDGE.

Rutherford went home in no enviable frame of mind. He cursed himself for having gone to Barn street at all—and yet, if there was anything for him to know about Miss Wilton, it was better that he should know it at once. It had been hideous to hear her name from that woman's lips. At least he had forced her to acknowledge that she had lied to Billy in claiming Miss Wilton as a cousin. He was not very proud of the way in which he had obliged her to tell the truth, and he was ashamed of himself for losing control of his temper. In the heat of the moment he had sought only the surest and quickest way of getting from her the confession of her falsehood.

For the last ten years Rutherford had run the gauntlet of London mothers and not one of them had succeeded in securing him for her daughter. He had grown to think himself safe. He had had passing fancies for one or two of these daughters, it is true, and sometimes he had gone dangerously near to an engagement, but till lately he had not found the woman with whose fate he would have cared to link his own. Now he had seen a girl who appeared to realize his ideal, and the fate with had revealed her to him seemed intent upon torturing him with the most hideous doubts. He could associate nothing but that which is pure and beautiful with Miss Wilton, but there seemed a damning agreement between what he himself had seen and the horrible suggested of his cousin's mistress.

Away with it! He would shut his ears to this poison. It was infamous—infamous an insult even to think of Miss Wilton together with the woman whose foul hint was rankling in his mind like a fester in the flesh. Ugly questions rose from it, like the breath in pestilence, and bred boubts and suspicions that were maddening. He could not think calmly. He could not sleep, and half the night he lay awake tormenting himself. He placed no strong reliance on anything that Mrs. Hartley said, but facts were sufficiently compromising to allow him no peace. What if Mrs. Wilton and her daughter were imposters who by sheer daring were trying to get a footing in decent society? The Dean's report of them alas went for nothing; the girl's beauty and the mother's charm were quite enough to interest him in their welfare, and even he owned that he knew nothing of them or of their antecedents.

Then, like a glimpse of the sun through a break in the clouds of a storm, there came before him a recollection of Miss Wilton's face. How could he who had looked into her pure eyes allow a doubt even to cross his mind? He could see her now as he had seen her at the piano—her straight young form, her head with the light on her hair, her face, that had seemed to him transfigured as she sang. A feeling of shame came over him—of remorse almost—that even with grounds for suspicion he should have failed to trust her.

He did not pretend even to himself that he was not in grave danger of falling in love with her. He did not ask whether this had already happened, but he knew that Miss Wilton was very constantly in his thoughts. He was not a man to rush headlong into marriage.

He lay awake now, thinking, and trying to determine upon some course of action. The Wiltons were strangers in England. If Miss Wilton had somehow made acquaintance with Mrs. Hartley was it not his duty to warn her? It was quite possible that there was a certain amount of truth in what Mrs. Hartley had said. By some accident she might have been able to do Miss Wilton a trifling service, and, from the conversaeion about Lady Heron and her own people who objected to her appearing on the stage, Rutherford had seen that Mrs. Hartley had a hankering after presentable friends. It would never occur to her that in claiming Miss Wilton as a friend and relation the might compromise an innocent girl.

A William Shanks, residing at Clarkson, Airdrie, who was a very eccentric person, who was better known by the name of "Shaugie Wull," recently died rather suddenly. Although reported to be very wealthy, he was somewhat miserly in his disposition; but after his death no trace could be found of any personal property, though his heritable property was intact. His relatives searched the house diligently, but could find no trace of his pocket-book. One night a niece of the deceased's, who lives at Riggend, and had been one of the searchers, dreamed that she saw a hole in the roof above the weaver's shop where her uncle's cash would be found. Early next morning she proceeded to Clarkson, accompanied by a female friend, and getting permission from Mr. Scobble, the tenant of the weaver's shop, to make another search, they had not been up five minutes when they returned with the missing pocket-book, which had been found in the very place indicated in the dream. The pocket-book contained deposit receipts and other documents amounting in value to £520.

What Does It Mean?

"100 Doses One Dollar" means simply that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most economical medicine to buy, because it gives more for the money than any other preparation. System of Medicine.
All diseases successfully treated by a new system of non-poisonous and tasteless medicines. Send for free book explaining system and testimonials of the most remarkable cures on record.

I have been a great sufferer from a female weakness of long standing, and have been treated by several physicians, and have also been under treatment in the Toronto Hospital, and all failed to cure me. I saw a medical book explaining the Histogenetic System, and resolved to give it a trial. I consulted Dr. Rear, who prescribed these remedies and assured me they would cure me. I had my doubts, but was determined to try once more. I took treatment two weeks, and am utterly astonished at the results. I am nearly well, and no language can describe how thankful I am that my life is spared. This testimony is voluntary, and I give it hoping that hundreds of my sex may try the medicines and receive the same marvelous good that I have. They are good to take, and, unlike any medicine I ever took before, leave no bad effects.
MRS. J. FAWCETT.
June 5, 1890. 102 John street, Toronto.

I was attacked with congestion of the liver and inflammation of the kidneys, attended with excruciating pains in my side and back. Could not lie on either side—could scarcely breathe. The slightest movement caused agonizing pain. Nothing gave me relief. I sent for Dr. Rear, knowing he had cured by daughter of a dangerous illness with Histogenetic Medicine after she had been given up by four skillful physicians. In one week my pain was gone and liver and kidneys acting as well as ever. The cure is complete. It acts the most like magic of any medicine I ever took. I sincerely hope that the suffering ladies of Toronto and elsewhere may try the superior merits of these pure and tasteless medicines. My object in giving this testimony is purely through sympathy for the sick and dying.
