A Peculiar Case

COVERED WITH PIMPLES.

AN ANXIOUS MAN.

The Disease Disappears in Three Weeks by the Use of B.B.B.—Letter From Manitoba Fully Describing It.

Dear Sirs,—During the winter of 1892-93, I was covered with pimples on the inside of my right leg between the knee and the ankle. As I never had anything of the kind before I was anxious about it, and sought medical advice, but getting no relief from the doctor I tried a bottle of B.B.B., applying some of it to my leg as well as using it internally, and to my surprise the nasty disease, whatever it was, disappeared within three weeks, and I am thankful to say it has never re-appeared.

TOUGH ROW TO HOE.

Young Electricians Have a Hard Time Attaining Any Success.

F. H. Ford puts forward in an electrical journal a strong disclaimer of the statement which has been made in a daily paper, that "for the average young man the field of electrical engineering offers more promise of success than law, authorship, the grocery business or knife-grinding." Mr. Ford says that serious harm is being done in the continual holding up of the profession of the electrical engineer as one offering almost unlimited possibilities in the matter of salaries and the demand for men. The closing of many large works, owing to financial trouble or patent litigation, has thrown a large number of men of both experience and ability on the market, and the supply of engineers is in excess of the demand. The struggle for place which has naturally followed has forced down wages so low that the average engineer cannot command a better salary than the head book-keeper of a large wholesale concern. The young man who chooses electrical engineering as a profession must be prepared to work hard and long, and for wages that would ordinarily be considered inadequate for the work done. If he loves engineering for its own sake, there is as good a field in the electrical as in any branch of it, but the idea that there are positions with large salaries attached waiting to be filled by him is a mistake. There are but a few high salaried positions at best, and they are occupied by men who have large experience and solid influence with the capitalists back of the company. The young electrical engineer will be obliged to spend at least six years in preparations before he can earn enough to barely pay his expenses, and nearly all this time he will be paying out money instead of earning it. The young engineer usually has to start business for himself with very limited capital, if any, and has to accept a subordinate position with some company. Here his best ideas, as well as his best work, are given almost entirely for the benefit of his employer, and he has to suffer for his failures as if he were working for himself. Mr. Ford maintains that the demand in electricity at the present time is not for educated electricians, but for educated capitalists, who can understand that in the long run it will pay them far better to secure the services of capable officers, who know why things should be done, and who will look after economy in the output, than to hire cheap and irresponsible men, who waste more than the salary of a good man in inefficient methods of working. Mr. Ford thinks it is only when capital has been so educated that the relation between work done and pay received by the electrical engineer will compare favorably with that of the lawyer, the doctor, the writer and the merchant.

The Cost of Confetti.

Every one who has been in a Continental city at carnival time has seen the "confetti" which are thrown about in the mimic warfare in the streets. The making and selling of these tiny paper pellets constitutes an industry of some little importance. It is estimated that the Parisians alone spend £24,000 sterling, or 600,000 francs, upon them every year. Great fluctuations take place in the selling price. When the fun is at its fastest, and purchasers are eager, the price is as much as a franc and a half kilogramme, or say eightpence a pound English; but towards the end of the carnival holders are glad to dispose of them at 70 centimes a kilogramme, or less than half the former price. The total weight of confetti sold in Paris this year has been estimated at 500,000 kilogrammes, or over 1,000 tons.—London Daily News.

A Curious Fad.

The Count of Montesquieu, a wealthy and eccentric French nobleman, inhabits a splendid villa in the neighborhood of Paris, chiefly remarkable for its magnificent conservatory, which is used as a banqueting hall. Creeping among the plants in this winter garden are to be seen a number of little tortoises, which their eccentric owner has had enamelled and studded with precious stones.—Buntes Allerlei.

IN THE ANCIENT COLONY.

Confederation and Retrenchment the Main Newfoundland Topics.

St. John's, Nfld., April 26.—The results of the Confederation Conference participated in by Newfoundland's delegates just returned from Ottawa, so far as made public yesterday, increase the feeling of uncertainty here. Apparently the mass of the people are opposed to union with Canada, but there is a feeling that no other course is open. The followers of Premier Whiteway seem to be straining every nerve to grapple with the situation without submitting the question to a popular decision. The Whiteswayite organ, The Telegram, today published a proposed Government retrenchment scheme, providing for the abolition of a lot of offices and for the reduction of salaries. It is estimated that under the scheme an annual saving of $800,000 could be effected. The plan meets with some favor, but much criticism is evoked because it was not proposed before. The Whiteswayites also announce a revision of the tariff during the coming session of the Legislature. Members of the Opposition party in the Legislature accuse them of postponing the legislative session so as to make it impossible for the people to vote on Confederation. A revolt among the Government supporters in the Assembly would have taken place but for the fact that most of the Opposition confederates would then have joined the Government and have decided the question immediately. Reasoning people and the middle classes favor Confederation, but the majority of the people show a disinclination towards its adoption.

Sir Herbert Murray, the British Commissioner, now has 800 men employed on relief works.

HOT TIME AT HARTNEY.

Winnipeg, Man., April 26.—The business centre of the town of Hartney was destroyed by fire last night. The buildings destroyed were: O'Brien's Hotel, Beatty's tailor shop, Beutber's hardware store, Cuthbert's grocery, the Massey-Harris Company warehouse, the Ivison store, Barter's butcher shop, the Commercial Hotel, Rigg's butcher shop, Sutherland's bakery, McDonald's livery stables, Young's hardware store, Bower's harness shop.

O'Grady's Annexation Flapdoodle.

Buffalo, April 26.—The Commercial devotes its leading editorial to-day to "The Annexation Foolishness," and says that the answer of the Canadian Premier and the Liberal leaders is what intelligent Americans might have expected to such an untimely and unwarranted bit of flapdoodle as Mr. O'Grady worked off, in some politician's interest, in the Assembly on Wednesday. The Commercial argues that the religious question now dominant in Canada would bar any prospect of union.

Murdered Her Paramour.

New York, April 26.—Dominico Catado, an Italian bootblack, 30 years old, was murdered about noon to-day by his mistress, Mary Barbello, 22 years old. The woman nearly severed the head from the body with a razor.

Crazed by Accounts of Murders.

San Diego, Cal., April 26.—James Smith, a ranch hand near Delmar, crazed by reading accounts of the Emanuel Church murders in San Francisco, made a criminal and murderous assault on Mrs. Hugh Fraser, the wife of his employer, yesterday. The woman escaped and gave the alarm. Constable Bladworth attempted to arrest Smith, but the latter attacked him with a dirk and the officer shot and killed Smith.

Students on a Lark.

At a recent "students' evening" at the Comedie Parisienne, Paris, the pupils of the Ecole des Beaux Arts flocked in full force to the dainty little theatre where Loie Fuller now dances, leaving hardly a spare stall in the house for the occupation of the ordinary playgoer. Their enthusiastic admiration of the serpentine dance showed itself in many wonderful ways, wild choruses followed by a chahut or a kind of Red Indian war dance, with hats and sticks for scalps and tomahawks, and the burden of the last students' song as a war whoop, being one of the most startling as well as the most amusing. "Serpintinus" were in great request, but the most tasteful demonstration on the part of the students was their spontaneous ovation to Loie Fuller when she appeared, and was greeted with a shower of bouquets of violets, which fell so thick and fast that the stage was carpeted with them in an instant. A delegation of the students presented Loie Fuller with a handsome and unique gift—an album, to which each student had contributed a sketch in pen and ink, pencil, or water colors, and some with a literary turn of mind also verses in her honor.—Queen.

A Domestic Autocrat.

"My dear, the weather is not fit for you to attend the cheap sale to-day. I must positively forbid you to go out."

"You couldn't prevent my going if you were Czar of all the Russias."

A Domestic Siege.

"Mercy! Goodness!" exclaimed Mr. Watkins, dropping his pipe in consternation, "what is that awful riot in the kitchen?"

"That's the war with China," answered his wife placidly, going on with her book.

Antipodean Politics.

Premier Reid of New South Wales informed a deputation to-day that the entire Dibbs' tariff of New South Wales, except the grain duty, probably would be repealed in July.

The first practice of the Toronto Lacrosse Club is called for this afternoon at 4 o'clock, when it is expected quite a number will atke advantage of the weather and that Rosedale will resume its usual appearance of activity.

The prospects for a bright season for the club is particularly good, and with three teams in the field—the first striving for honors in the senior league, the second after the championship of the Canadian Lacrosse Association, and the third team looking longingly towards the medals offered in the City League—there will be plenty of opportunities for everyone.

No Offence to the U S.

New York, April 26.—A despatch to The Sun from London says: Great Britain will use the greatest care not to offend the United States in the settlement of her quarrel with Nicaragua. Lord Kimberley has been most anxious from the outset to make it clear that he is unwilling to offend American interests.

Instructions for landing the bluejackets this morning have been carefully framed, and it is certainly far from the intention of the British Government to undertake a policy of occupation such as exists in Egypt.

U.S Attitude Courteously Correct.

London, April 26.—The Pall Mall Gazette, speaking of the Nicaragua difficulty, says the attitude of the United States in conection therewith has been as courteously correct as possibly could have been. The paper adds that this is a good omen for a close understanding upon the Chino-Japanese question, and the action of Great Britain may be relied upon to teach the Spanish-American countries that none of them is too insignificant to treat foreigners decently.

Nicaragua Canal Commissioners.

Washington, April 26.—The Nicaragua Canal Engineer Commissioners received their instructions from Secretary Gresham to-day and left for New York this evening to examine the plans and contracts with the International Canal Co. in that city. They will return to Washington next week.

Mr. James Burrows, the well-knkwn night watchman, has been appointed outside watchman by Mr. R. Simpson for his premises, 88-90 Yonge-street.

HOW MEN GO TO COURT.

RULES OBSERVED AT ONE OF THE QUEEN'S LEVEES.

Origin of the Custom—And the Proper Dress Worn on This Important Occasion—Peers, Royal Chaplains, City Magistrates and People With no Official Standing.

Most men who hold official positions under government consider it their duty to go to court to pay their respects to the sovereign or her representative, levees being now generally held by the Prince of Wales, and occasionally by some other prince, on the Queen's behalf. Officers of the army or navy, diplomatists, or the higher civil servants go to make their bow at St. James' either from a sense of loyalty, or from the necessity of their position, or with a desire to keep themselves in evidence, in the hope of promotion.

Then there are peers, people who have no official and very little social standing, royal chaplains, and a few of the more prominent clergy, city magnates, and so forth, who go to swell the crowd. The manner of going is much more simple than might be supposed.

At the Lord Chamberlain's office one can, on application, obtain a printed copy of the "Regulations to be observed with regard to the Queen's Levees."

If one is to be presented, that is, to attend for the first time, it is necessary to secure a presentation, and this, as in the case of an introduction between people in ordinary life, must be made by some one who has been before presented himself, and is thus technically known to the sovereign. It need not be difficult for anybody to hunt up some one so qualified. He who is willing to present must then send in the name of his friend to the lord chamberlain's office at least two days before the levee, in order that the name may be submitted to her Majesty for approval, which means, probably, that a man will be allowed to attend unless he is "known" to the police or to the president of the Divorce Court. If all is well, as it generally is, two cards are sent, on which the name is to be clearly written, to be carefully taken to the levee.

Then the dress has to be decideed upon. An officer in the army, navy or volunteers wears the uniform of his rank, and most people can rake up something to which they are entitled, if it be only a deputy lieutenant's uniform. Failing any official garb, the ordinary gentleman buys or hires a levee dress, which consists of black velvet coat, vest and knee-breeches, black silk stockings, shoes with buckles, laced hat and sword. A clergyman wears an old-fashioned clerical dress, knee-breeches, shoes and stockings, silk cassock and gown, and a three-cornered hat. And a very fine sight it is to see a crowd of curiously attired gentlemen, some looking very uncomfortable, making their way to St. James' Palace on a fine morning in the early summer.

The origin of levees is curious. Two hundred years ago a monarch received his court as he dressed. As soon as he was well awake and prepared to rise—se lever in French—members of his family and the higher officials would enter and pay their respects, then stand about the room while the king put on some of his clothes that performed the slight abolutions that were in those days deemed sufficient. When he was partly dressed, and seated in a chair to be shaved and generally finished off, the greater crowd of courtiers would be announced, presentations would be made, and the king would chat with any around him. This was the levee, or reception, held by Queen Anne as he arose from his bed. Even queens held levees in their bedrooms, but in their case the reception was delayed until the toilet was practically finished. It need hardly be said that things are managed differently now.

At last, after a lengthened wait, a clatter of hoofs is heard, a roll of carriage wheels, and a few bars of the national anthem announce that the illustrious personage has arrived. But the move does not come yet. Ambassadors, great officials, and others first make their bow. And not till they have finished is the mass of more commonplace loyalty set in motion.

The barrier of the pew nearest the throne-room is removed, and its occupants file into the presence; as that empties, those in the second pew move into it, and so on back through the series of rooms, all the crowd behind gradually approaching the personification of the dignity of the empire. At last comes the turn of our novice. He will enter a large room with railings across it, forming a barrier something like that one sees on entering the Crystal Palace, with a gate in place of the turnstiles; he will find himself at last marching solemnly in single file with many others, making for a door at the top left-hand corner of this room.

At this door stands a sentry, a member of the Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, and, passing him, one enters the throne-room. This is certainly not a very imposing place. The room is not very large, and at its farther end is a chair with a red canopy over it. In front of the house, at the edge of a low platform or step, stands the illustrious personage. On his left hand stand other princes in order of precedence, and on his right is the lord chamberlain and a few of his satellites, the whole forming a narrow line in front of the throne, of which the illustrious personage is the centre.

In the middle of the room is a group of equerries and other attendants on the princes, and round this group flows the line of men as they approach and leave the front of the throne. There is no waiting, or even pausing; you pass up the left of the room, treading close on the heels of the man in front, and when you come to the first of the officials, who are of course on the left hand of those who come up the room, the card with your name written on it is given up. Your card travels from hand to hand, keeping pace with its owner, till it reaches the lord chamberlain, who reads out the name just as you approach the prince.

Directly you are in front of him you make a bow, which the prince acknowledges; if you are personally known to him he offers his hand, and you pass on, making a bow to each of the other princes, of whom there may be five or six, who will also shake hands if they know you. And that is all. You go down by another staircase, and leave the palace in the proud consciousness that you have been to court.

New York State denies women the ballot. They vote everywhere to use Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder.

Grenadier Bandsmen Dine

The annual dinner of the Band of the Royal Grenadiers, which took place last night at the band room in Scott-street, was one of the most successful military functions of the season. An excellent menu, a good toast list, the speeches being interspersed with music, songs and recitations by some of the best local talent, combined to make the evening a most enjoyable one. The excellent success of the dinner reflects great credit upon its promoters.

There is danger in neglecting a cold. Many who have died of consumption dated their troubles from exposure, followed by a cold which settled on their lungs, and in a short time they were beyond the skill of the best physician. Had they used Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup before it was too late, their lives would have been spared. This medicine has no equal for curing coughs, colds and all affections of the throat and lungs.
