LITERALLY TIED UP!

Passenger Train Seized by a Sheriff—Engine Held Fast With a Logging Chain.

Guthrie, O. T., Dec. 3.—Saturday's Choctaw passenger train was attached by the sheriff of Parkersburg, Oklahoma, and detained until a judgment of $76 was satisfied.

When the engineer was about to leave the station he found that his engine was prevented from continuing on its journey because of a logging chain which had been fastened to it by the sheriff. A discharged employe had secured the attachment.

Mr. Yarnmen, treasurer of the road, was in his private car at the rear of the train, accompanied by a party of Eastern friends. After parleying with the sheriff for half an hour Mr. Yarnmen paid the judgment. Then the train was released.

THE BIGGEST AND THE BEST!

Pronounced Success of the St. Andrew's Society's Celebration and Banquet.

Pointed, Pithy and Patriotic Speeches by Dr. Samson, Rev. Dr. Milligan, Col. Culver, Rev. Dr. McCrae, Principal Merchant and Others---Fraternal Greetings From Other Societies.

St. Andrew's Society has to its credit a long list of successful dinners, but nowhere on the record will there be found a success to equal that achieved by the banquet given last night at the Tecumseh House. In all the things that go to make such an affair notable —in point of attendance, in quality of speeches, in excellence of culinary arrangements—the banquet was complete, and the officers and members of St. Andrew's Society are to be congratulated on having once more shown themselves adepts in the art of entertaining on a large scale. The attendance was over 150, and was so large as to tax even the capacious diningroom of the Tecumseh. The speeches were judicious admixtures of wit and wisdom, and they were diversified by the introduction at proper intervals of the old ballads and stirring songs that never grow old. Not one jot or tittle of the time-hallowed customs were abated. The haggis, in royal state, made the circuit of the room, with two bare-legged lusty pipers blowing their very lungs out in the effort to do it honor. The health of the King was loyally drunk in the picturesque old Hielan' fashion, one foot on the table, and at parting all clasped hands, as in stentorian tones they expressed lyrically the hope of "drinking a cup o' kindness yet, for the sake of Auld Lang Syne."

The efforts of the society's executive were ably seconded by the management of the Tecumseh House, and the result of their combined exertions was the success attained. The Tecumseh House dining-room never looked so well as it did in its dress of huge flags and generous festoons of bunting. The attractiveness of the tables was enhanced by artistic lamps with tiny electric lights. In the preparation of the room for the banquet, Mine Host Hook engineered a record-breaking feat in completely stripping and resetting a banquet for 150 guests in fourteen minutes after the last regular guest had left it.

The menu, of "the caird o' the guid things," as it was interpreted for Scottish eyes, was as follows:

Oysters, Raw or Stew, frae Leith.
Kail Broth, suppit wi' horn spunes.
Cock-o-Leekie.
Tecumseh Hoose Sprats. Biled Samon, frae the Tweed. Sliced Roastit Tatties.

Biled Knout's Tongue. Chukie Dumplins. Sweetbreads.

Fig Fritters, wi' flowers o' orange.
Ribs o' Heilan' Stirk, wi' Perthshire Sauce. Broon Sweet Tatties.
Roastit Bubbly Jock, stuffed wi' sybies, an' cranberry sauce.
Roastit Venison, sent by Andrew Carnegie Skibo. Sweet Tammy Taes.

Royal Scotch Haggis,
Great chieftain o' the puddin' race, wi' bagpipe sauce.

Lobster Salad. Rooslan Salad.
Champit Tatties. Biled Tatties. Tatties wi' Their Jackets On. Green Peas.
Biled Ingins. Biled Neeps.

Celery frae Haddo Haa'.

Sweet Puddin' Pie. Pumpkin Pie. Aipple Pie.

Wine and Champagne Tremlin' Jellie.
For the English bodies, Plum Pudding, brandy sauce.

Hokey-Pokey Ice Cream.
A Kebbuck o' Maclaren's Cheese, frae Perth.
Farls o' Cake. Aipples. Nits. Aumonds. Tea and Coffee.

Those Who Were There.

Introducing the Toast List.

President John Pringle, in introducing the toast list, thanked the guests for their presence, especially those who were not members of the society. He took occasion to refer to the death of ex-Mayor John Campbell, a former president of the society and "a straightforward, strongly-built, high-minded Scotchman." Commencing life as a poor boy, he had, with the characteristics of his race, taken advantage of his opportunities and risen to a position of importance. In his death St. Andrew's Society had lost an old and respected member, and the city had lost one of its most distinguished citizens. President Pringle then said it was his privilege to be the first president of the society to call for the health of "The King," and he asked the guests to honor in the old Highland fashion, one foot on the table.

The toast was acknowledged with a spirit that showed the love and loyalty which had been pledged to Britain's glorious Queen had been given in all its entirety to her son and successor.

The next toast was that to "The Imperial Forces of the Crown," proposed also by President Pringle and responded to by Mr. F. W. Merchant, principal of the Normal School.

Principal Merchant.

Principal Merchant, in opening, spoke of the diffidence with which he rose to respond to the toast, first, because he was acting in place of Sir John Carling, prevented from being present by illness, who would have responded in his usual eloquent and patriotic vein, and second, because he had never been connected in any way with the forces of His Majesty the King. Principal Merchant said that his only qualification for the honor of replying lay in the fact that he had been a life-long admirer of the courage, daring and magnificent achievements of not only the English forces but of the soldiers of the colonies. The stuff of which the latter are made was well shown when so recently the sons of the Dominion went forth to the veldt of South Africa and there displayed that they possessed all the dash of the Irishman, the courage and foresight of the Scotchman, and the dogged perseverance of the Englishman, adding to them the native intelligence of the Canadian. Canada has shown that she has the real foundation of a nation in her citizens. When word came that the motherland was in trouble and would welcome the assistance of her children, the sentiment of loyalty and love had actuated the noblest and best to go out and do battle for the empire. "It is our sorrow, but no less our pride," said the speaker, "that citizens, not only of this country, but of this city, had given up their lives for the empire's honor. But this sacrifice will not be in vain, for if the time ever comes when we are in trouble, and need help, the force that has never been conquered will come to our aid, and our defense will remain sure and safe forever."

Col. Culver, U. S. Consul.

Second Vice-President MacRobert introduced the toast of "The President of the United States," which was honored with a heartiness second only to that accorded the toast of the King. The toast brought to his feet Col. Culver, United States Consul, who spoke as follows:

Again I have occasion to thank you for the hearty and cordial manner in which you received this toast, "The President of the United States," and I wish again to express my delight at being present at another feast of St. Andrew, not only a feast for the body but a feast for the intellect as well.

But I must assure you that I approach the subject assigned to me, with sadness, a sadness though mingled with joy, such as a person experiences when emerging from a dark shadow into the bright light of the sun, for if I interpret my subject aright I cannot avoid referring to him who a year ago was president, but who now, through the cruel and dastardly crime of the assassin, "sleeps his long last sleep;" neither can I escape referring to a parallel sorrow which came to your own people during the past year. For only one year ago tonight, at this festal board, we drank the health of your own beloved Queen, and our own beloved McKinley, and while the death of the one was anticipated and the world in some measure prepared for it, yet the sorrow was just as great and the gloom as world-wide as when, later on, the death of the other one came in a moment, all unprepared, as by a flash from an angry cloud, while the world stood transfixed with horror at the fiendish crime.

Never in the history of the world was a ruler more justly beloved than your own saintly Queen. Through long years of service in the interest of her people, under that intense light which beats only on a throne, and she met every expectation of her people, and by her queenliness and her womanliness and her motherliness she had attracted the affections of her people, as the sturdy oak attracts the tendrils of the vine, until she was literally encased by their love. So with our own beloved McKinley, who had by his manliness and his honesty and his patriotism, and his true Christian character, so endeared himself to his countrymen, that when these two lives went out and the ties of affection were broken, their people walked in the deepest darkness and sorrow, while the nations of the earth lavished their sympathy upon the grief-stricken people of the English tongue.

History in all its annals fails to furnish the name of a ruler to be compared in all respects to these two great rulers of the English-speaking people. They were the highest specimens of their race, and represented the highest modern idea of liberal government. But the deep shadow which overwhelmed us for the moment, and brought such heartfelt sadness to the people of both countries is passed, as all earthly shadows disappear, and out of the darkness and the gloom occasioned by the shadow of death in both countries, there steps two stalwart Christian rulers who will be the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night to lead their people on to yet greater achievements in the interest of a common humanity, and tonight we drink to the health of King Edward and President Roosevelt. Surely the mantel of Elijah, in each instance, has fallen upon an Elisha.

Usually when death overtakes a ruler and the change is made to another all untried and but little acquainted as he must be with the great responsibilities of his high office his own country and the world experience a shock, which, for a time, staggers the business interests and fills the world with doubt and dire forebodings for the future; but not so in the changes which have come to us, for the people of both countries, without a moment's hesitation turned to their new ruler, with a gladness and a welcome, which was inspiring, and renewed the confidence of the world in the stability and grandeur of these mighty nations.

No rulers ever come better equipped for their respective spheres; both have education, natural endowment, intense patriotism and an earnest desire to serve the best interests of their people; and through their influence and leadership, when the last grim vestige of war is banished from our lands, as we hope, forever, we will attain a yet higher and nobler place among the nations of the earth.

I think we need not be told that the people of the world are being gradually led out of the darkness of the past ages into the twentieth century light of Christian civilization. The evidence is abundant, and all about us, the cry of the age is for righteous self-government, tyranny and misrule must be banished from the earth, and in its stead an honest, comprehensive and enlightened administration of public affairs must be estabilished everywhere, and what two rulers are more pledged and capable of securing good government than your good King Edward and President Roosevelt? The people of the United States have unbounded confidence in our new president. He need not have said when, standing by the bier of the martyred president, "I will carry on the work where he has left it," for the policy which McKinley followed, and through which so much was accomplished, was and is equally the policy of President Roosevelt. They were both equally pledged to the same great principles of government, but his having said it, and said it in the presence of death, was unmistakable evidence of his intentions and the confidence of the people was at once complete.

President Roosevelt is thoroughly democratic; he is of the people, and for the people, while his ideals are of the highest, not only of government, but individuals as well. Merit is his

THE BONINE TRIAL

Testimony for Defense Begun—15 Witnesses Testified for the Accused.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The defense in the case of Mrs. Lola Ida Bonine, charged with the murder of Jas. Seymour Ayres, yesterday placed fifteen witnesses on the stand. The purpose was to establish that Mrs. Bonine evinced no particular partiality toward Ayres, and that her conduct and bearing toward him differed in no respect from that displayed toward other guests at the hotel.

William C. Hay, who, with his family, lived at the Kenmore at the time of the tragedy, testified that the dances at the Kenmore were usually arranged by Mrs. Bonine, and that at these dances her bearing toward Ayres was nothing out of the ordinary. It had been her habit, he said, when the dancers were not prompt in their attendance, to go to their rooms and urge them to come down.

Mr. Hay stated on cross-examination that he understood it had been Mrs. Bonine's intention to leave the hotel, but after the tragedy he had advised her that it would be inadvisable to do so until the affair was clear up.

Richard L. Jenks testified that he heard Mrs. Bonine giving Ayres advice against drinking to excess.

George B. Gardner, assistant attorney in the interior department, to whom Mrs. Bonine first told her story, and who was one of the government witnesses, testified that he had seen Mrs. Bonine and Ayres dancing together, and had observed nothing unusual in their conduct.

David C. Mooney said he had observed Mrs. Bonine dance with Ayres, but saw nothing in her attitude toward him differing from that toward others. Similar testimony was given by other witnesses.

One of the jurors was taken suddenly ill during the day, but with the aid of a physician, managed to continue throughout the day.
