Commercial College.

THE Evening Session will be resumed on MONDAY evening Oct. 1st. Hours from 7.30 to 9.30.

RARE OPPORTUNITY.

It having been represented to us that a reduction in tuition fees would be acceptable to many who were losers by the late fire, we will, until the 31st Oct. allow a discount of 20 per cent to all purchasing Scholarships or entering the Evening Classes for the Winter Term.

In addition to the above, those who enter the Evening Classes on the 1st Oct. will receive one month's tuition, free of charge.

In order that no one may feel any delicacy in accepting the above discount, we will extend the privilege to all, whether losers by the fire or not.

Scholarships secured now, by Post Office order, or otherwise, will be good for any future time.

CHATHAM, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1877.

Isabel of Austria.

We would be obliged if some of our literary readers would give us the name of the Author of the following beautiful ballad, and also the legend connected with it.

'Midst the palace bowers of Hungary, Imperial Presburg's pride,
With the noble-born and beautiful, assembled at her side,
She stood beneath the summer heaven, the soft winds sighing on,
Stirring the green and arching boughs, like dancers in the sun;
The beautiful pomegranate's gold, the snowy orange bloom,
The lotus and the creeping vine, the rose's rich perfume,
The willow, wreathing with its green some statue's marble hair,—
All that could charm the exquisite, or light the soul was there,
But she—a monarch's chosen one—leaned gloomily apart,
Her dark eyes tearfully cast down and a shadow on her heart;
Young, beautiful and dearly loved, what sorrow has she known?
Are n t the hearts and swords of all held sacred as her own?
Is not her lord the kingliest in battle field or bower,
The foremost in the Council Hall or at the banquet hour?
Is not his love as pure and deep as his own Danube's tide?
And, wherefore, in her princely home, weeps Isabel. his bride?
She raised her jewelled hand and flung her veiling tresses back,
Bathing its dewy taperings within their glossy black,
A tear fell on the orange leaves' rich gum and mimic blossom,
And fringed robes shook fearfully upon her sighing bosom,
"Smile on smile on," she murmured low, "for all is joy around,
"Shadow and sunshine, stainless skies, soft airs and blossomed ground,
"'Tis meet that light of heart should smile when nature's brow is fair
"And melody and fragrance join, twin-sisters of the air;
"But ask not me to share with you the beauty of the scene,
"The fountain fall, mosaic walks or tesselated green,
"And point not to the mild blue sky or glorious summer sun,
"I know how very fair is all the hand of God hath done.
"The hills, the vales, the sunlit clouds, the fountains leaping forth,
"The swaying trees, the scented flowers, the dark green robes of earth—
"I love them still, yet I have learned to turn aside from all
"And never more my heart shall own their sweet but fatal thrall.
"And I could love the noble one, whose mighty name I bear,
"And closer to my bursting heart his hallowed image wear,
"And I could watch our sweet young flower unfolding day by day
"And taste of that unearthly bliss which mothers only may;
"But, no, I may not cling to earth, that voice is in my ear,
"That shadow lingers by my side, the death wail and the bier—
"The cold and starless night of death, where day may never beam,
"The silence and the loathsomeness, the sleep that hath no dream—
"Oh God! to leave this fair bright world and, more than all, to know
"The moment when the spectral one shall deal his fearful blow,
"To know the day, the very hour, to feel the tide roll on.
"To shudder at the gloom before and weep the sunshine gone,
"To count the days, the few short days of light and life and breath,
"Between me and the noisome grave, the voiceless home of death!
"Alas! if knowing, feeling this I murmur at my doom,
"Let not thy frowning, oh! my God, lend darkness to the tomb!
"Oh! I have borne my spirit up and smiled amid the chill
"Remembrance of my certain doom, that lingers with me still!
"I would not cloud our fair child's brow, nor let a tear drop dim
"The eyes that meet my wedded lord, lest it should sadden him!
"But there are moments when the gush of feeling hath its sway,
"That hidden tide of unnamed woe nor fear nor love can stay.
"Smile on, smile on, light-hearted ones, your sun of joy is high;
"Smile on, and leave the doomed of heaven alone to weep and die."

The scene was changed.— * * * *

A funeral chant was wailing through Vienna's holy pile,
A coffin, with its gorgeous pall was borne along the aisle,
The banners of a kingly race waved high above the dead,
A mighty band of mourners came, a king was at their head,
A youthful king, with mournful tread and dim and tearful eye,
He had not dreamed that one so young as his fair bride could die.
And sad and high above the throng the funeral anthem rang—
Mourn for the hope of Austria, mourn for the loved and young!
The wail went up from other lands—the valleys of the Hun,
Fair Parma, with her orange bowers, and hills of vine and sun,
The lillies of Imperial France drooped as the sound went by,
And the long lament of cloistered Spain was mingled in the cry,
The dwellers in Colorma's halls the Stoic in his cave,
They bowed at the Escurial, the Magyer stern and brave—
All wept the early stricken flower, and burst from every tongue,
Mourn for the dark eyed Isabel, mourn for the loved and young.

ASON.

Notes by Road and Shore.

[By our Travelling Observer.]

We again availed ourselves of Mr. Whitty and his much enduring vehicle to get over that portion of the road from Shippegan, already alluded to (some 11 miles) until we got a fair

START ON THE ROAD TO CARAQUETTE.

It is only just to say that Mr. Whitty is a punctual and careful courier, over a rough route and gives general satisfaction. The last half of the stage road from Shippegan to Caraquette is excellent and passes through a very pleasant country, inhabited, almost without exception, by French; the homesteads are, moreover, generally neat and in good repair, though the latter part of the road for a considerable distance runs through the woods, until the traveller finally emerges upon the first intimation of which, he receives from the white palings surmounted by evergreens, which enclose the large establishment of Robin & Co. at this point, the numerous wooden buildings of which, facing the shore, are kept in such an immaculate state of whitewash and red paint, that they look as if they had been just taken out of a toy shop window and set out to give variety to the marine landscape which they form part of, consisting of the harbour sheltered by Caraquette Island, with the hilly shores of the Bay of Chaleur stretching away in the distance.

CARAQUETTE ITSELF,

Upon the low sandy beach are the large open fishing boats turned upside down, while above, on the opposite side of the road, is the establishment of Alex. Rive & Co. and, further on, the store and residence of the Hon. R. Young (who has also, like others, a branch at Shippegan) with scattered dwellings between. The general aspect is not unlike that of an English fishing village, Caraquette being one of the prettiest places on the route, at least, as regards the business part of it, and with a railway along the coast might, at sometime or other, become a fashionable watering place.

Caraquette is said to employ a fleet of about 300 open boats of from 7 to 12 tons. These boats are mostly clinker built, of cedar, though there are a few carvel built boats, the material of which is hacmatac. There was good fishing this year until about the 1st of August, after which it failed, although it is thought the catch will be nearly an average one. The product for the present year, including fish sold in this locality will amount to about 10,000 quintals of cod. Allowing ⅔ of a gallon of oil per quintal, this would give 7000 gals, or about 27 tons. The herring catch was almost a failure; the quality in equal to that of Canso herrings. The dry August and September is stated to be fish is mostly shipped to the West India market. The season for cod is from May to October, and from the 15th of August till October there is good mackerel fishing which the fishermen along the coast are gradually going into, although hitherto it has been the custom to lie back after the cod fishing was over.

K. F. Burns Esq., M. P. P. shipped some 2,500,000 ft. of lumber this season from Caraquette.

In winter there is considerable want of employment for the fishermen, who occupy themselves in building their own boats and making the drums and casks used in shipping dry fish to the West India market.

SCHOOLS

There is a superior school in charge of Mr. Wall of St. John, with Mr. Legere, who has a 3rd class license, as assistant. About two-thirds of the pupils are French. There is another School in the same district, (Caraquette Centre) and the pupils in both number about 80. There are also Schools in several other districts.

CHURCHES.

About a mile from the business centre along the main road is the Roman Catholic Church, a handsome edifice of stone with a wooden tower and spire, which was built by the Rev. Mr. Pacquet. It is capable of seating 2000 people
