FALL BROCKVILLE ASSIZES.

From the "Recorder."

THE MURDER CASE.

Last week we inserted as much of the evidence against Bolger and Hannahan, charged with the murder of Hugh Bradford, as time, space, and other duties would permit. For breaking off where we did in the evidence, we have been found fault with, and motives laid to our charge which never entered our mind. It is alleged that in breaking off at the end of the examination of Noble, we sought to benefit the prisoners—especially Bolger, and that our expressed desire that the death penalty should not be carried into effect, was evidence of the fact. Those who judge thus are mistaken. It was utterly impossible to give more of the evidence last week than appeared. We attended court during the whole of Monday, and up till one o'clock on Tuesday morning—then at the opening of the court on Tuesday morning when the prisoners were sentenced. In the afternoon of Tuesday the writer had to appear again in court to prove the publication of a Railroad notice, and when freed from the court other business connected with the paper had to be attended to, so that on Tuesday evening we were engaged in writing out the evidence which appeared till a very late hour, in order to have it ready for the compositors in the morning. It is needless to say we felt fatigued—those who doubt it should try the experiment. We could do no more than we did. We are thus prolix in order to show the injustice of imputing motives to us in only giving Noble's testimony. As to the opinion we hold respecting the policy of inforcing the death penalty against Bolger, we trust we have the same right to exercise our judgment on the subject as is claimed by those who differ with us. That Bolger is guilty of the murder of Bradford, we firmly believe; but mercy is an attribute of heaven, twice blessed, and we do not think it would militate against the interests of the community, were the inhabitants spared the horrid spectacle of seeing a fellow creature hung up by the neck. Reason, not passion, should be the guide in all cases of this description.

We will now proceed to detail the rest of the evidence.

Michael Murphy sworn and examined by Mr. Lyon for the crown. Knew Hugh Bradfoad, the deceased. Knows the prisoners at the bar. Knew them on the 19th of May last. Was at White's tavern on that night. Stopped there a little while. Saw the prisoner Bolger there. Saw Bradford there, he was sitting on a chair or a bench. Did not see Cardic there, but saw Noble. Did not see Hannahan there. Saw Benjamin Stewart there and a number of others. Mr. White told them all to leave, because he was going to shut up. Thinks Bolger left with Noble, but did not see him do so. Does not know where Cardic and Bradford went. When witness left, he went up Perth Street. Thinks there was a man named Poole with him, but is not certain. Thinks he met Poole outside. Before he got to the hay-scales he heard a noise, and when he went up to the hay-scales, he saw Spence and Hanahan fighting. Hanahan was down on the ground. Witness asked a person in the crowd to help him to separate them. Witness went and took Spence of Hanahan, who was lying on his back and Spence lying over him. Spence was beating Hannahan on the body and head. When he took Spence off Hanahan, Hanahan got up, and witness then saw Noble and Bolger together, standing as if they were speaking. They were on the side-walk. Does not know where Spencer went to. Hanannan seemed as if he wanted to get Spenser again, he was in a passion, and Noble came up and desired him not to be foolish, or something like that. Hanahan then drew his hat and struck Noble. The two then got into holds and fell one on the top of the other and rolled on the ground till they got on the hay-scales Witness then saw Mr Kelly, the Priest, coming up and he asked witness if he would assist him in separating them. Witness said he would, and took hold of Noble and lifted him away. Mr Kelly then advised them to go home and gave Bolger a kick behind to make him go home When Mr kelley went away Bolger said he did not like that very well. Did not see Bradford there. Bolger went towards his own house, but does not know whether he went home or not. Does not know where Hanahan went to. Witness went up Church Street and there met Cardic and Bradford who seemed to be going home. They all walked together along Church street till somewhere about Hugh Lennon's. Some one said they would like to get a glass of beer. Witness replied that if they would go to Willson's he would treat them but the others objected because it was too far away. It was then proposed to try Craig's as they had seen him on the street when the men were fighting and if they were to go there they might get in before the went to bed. They started to try Craig's but not by the same way they had come. This was proposed by witness because he did not wish to pass Mr Kelly's house for fear he might think there was another row. They went round to Craig's by another street. When they got to Craig's they saw no light and they did not get in. Cardic met Spencer and stood speaking to him on Perth Street, and witness and Bardford went on up Perth Street to go home by Church Street. Before they got to the hay-scales they heard cheers as if there was a fight. Bradford said if there was any persons fighting they ought to go up and try to separate them, As they were going up one of the two men cried out, "We are the two boys who can dissect the best two Orangemen in town." Thinks it was Bolger who cried this—thinks it was his voice. They went up to the hay-scales. Bradford was walking before witness. When witness went up. Hanahan said to him "Mike, I will remember you another day." Witness thought this was said in consequence of the part he took when Hanahan was fighting with Spence. Witness told Hanahan that he had been a friend to him. Bolger insinuated something against witness also and wished to change hats with him. Witness told Bolger he had nothing against him and would not change hats with him. A person named Keys was passing at the time and heard what was said but he does not know where Keys is now Bradford then said, "The Priest left you at home and you should have remained there." This he thinks was said to Bolger. As soon as Bradford said this Hanahan grabbed Bradford round the waist and Bradford made a turn around to try and loose Hanahan's hold when Bolger made a side blow and hit Bradford on the left side. Bradford immediately fell quite helpless as if he had no life or as if he had gone into a faint. Hanahan and Bradford fell down together. Witness never saw a man fall as quick from a common blow. He saw no knife. He only saw Bolger strike one blow. Bolger went and stood as if stooping over Bradford. Witness took Bolger by the shoulder and he rose up from his stooping posture. He told Bolger to go home and Bolger went away directly. Noble then took hold of Bardford and tried to drag him from Hanahan to the hay-scales. Hanahan was holding on to Bradford's legs at the time and witness went and helped Noble to get Bradford placed on his feet on the side-way near the hay-scales but he quivered and hung his head and seemed quite useless. When witness was helping Bradford to stand he felt something warm and soft which turned out to be blood but which at the time he thought was coming from Bradford's nose, as the idea of stabbing never entered his head. Bradford then stood and shook all over and said in a very weak voice, "O, you've let me be murmured amongst your hands." Bracford then fell on his back and they carred him to Craig's door and laid him down when witness saw the blood running down deceased's trowsers. He knew then that deceased had been stabbed. He went for the doctor and when he came back he was told that Bradford was dead. The deceased was in perfect health before that.—Some one brought a candle or lantern and he saw the blood lying on the spot deceased stood on when Bolger struck him. After the stroke deceased dropped as if he had lost all animation. After deceased fell Bolger went between witness and deceased and stooped over deceased. He then caught his shoulder and raised him from stooping. Had no notion of Bolger having a knife or he would not have gone near him. Is satisfied that the wound in the heart was the cause of Bradford's death."

Cross-examined by Mr. O'Reilly,—Was in White's that night but did not drink any. Stopped about half an hour there. Went to White's about nine o'clock. Does not know how long he stopped in White's the second time he went in. He had liquor then, Bradford might have taken liquor too, but he did not see him. Deceased lived with witness, He went back to White's for his boots and nothing else. Deceased and Murphy went in with him. Did not drink anything before. He might have gone to White's to loaf about the bar-room. Michael Murphy treated. Did not see any one else drink. It might be partly through fear he went into White's after he heard the noise in Perth Street. He did not wish to get into a row. He went for his boots too. Bradford shouted to witness to get Noble home, as he was in a fight. He had no stones in his hands. The fight was over when they went up. He did not go to Craig's, as he stood talking to Spence. When Hanahan was lying on the ground after Bradford was murdered, he lifted his foot to kick Hanahan, but did not do it.

Johnston Craig sworn and examined by Mr. Lyon. Knew Hugh Bradford. He also knew Hanahan, but did not know Bolger till the night of the murder. Bolger and Noble came into the house together that night. They were not drunk; they might have had a glass of liquor. They drank a glass of liquor each in his house. They were perfectly sensible. Did not see Murphy till he saw him at the row—he seemed sober. He did not know what the hour was when the row took place. It might be after ten. Bolger and Noble went off together. Recollects Priest Keely trying to get Bolger and Hanahan home. That was after the row. The Priest and witness took Hanahan to Bolger's house, but he would not go in, as he said it was not his house. He fell on his knees and begged Mr. Keely's pardon. Witness took him towards Conner's house, where Hanahan lived, but he forced himself back to Perth Street again. Saw Mr, Keely put Bolger in towards his own house. One of the prisoner's jumped up and swore he was the best fighting Papist in town, or they were the two best Papists in Brockville, and could whip the two best pups of Orangemen they could bring. The Priest came up and asked Murphy to separate them. Murphy took hold of Hanahan and the Priest took hold of Bolger. He saw Noble and Hanahan clench before the Priest came up. Mr. Kelly ordered them all to go home and keep quiet. He also told them not to respect him, but to respect themselves. They all separated, and witness went home. He did go to arrest Bolger when called on to do so by Dr. Edmondson. He ordered Bolger to open the door in Her Majesty's name. Bolger refused to open the door, and he broke it open and took him. He resisted and his wife clung to him. He saw traces of blood on the palms of Bolger's hands while in Dr. Edmondson's surgery. Saw other traces on him when he was taken to gaol. His shirt bore traces of blood. Examined Bolger to see if he was wounded from his saying that he had a wound on his arm. Found a dry wound but no bleedidg wound. Knew Bradford when he came to Brockville—never heard anything against his character. Never knew him to be quarrelsome. Bradford and witness had a few words once.

Cross-examined by Mr. O'Railly. Deceased was not at witness's house that night. Did not see him before that night for some time. Witness sells whiskey—such liquor as the law allows him to sell. Bolger never drank but one glass of liquor in his house. Noble does not frequent his house much. Perhaps once in two months. Noble takes a glass.—Witness never saw anything bad about him. His general character, so far as he knows, is good. Witness has been in town about nine months; a good many people frequent his house. He heard a noise in the street that night. Did not hear any fighting. There are three taverns in Perth Street; White's, Craig's, and Green's. He does not give people who fight liquor. Only gives them liquor so long as they are peaceable and sober. A man is sober when he is fit to transact business. Noble was not drunk. Bolger wanted another glass. Heard the noise at the hay-scales first. Heard noise all over town. A few moments after they left his house, he heard a noise betweeu his house and White's. Saw Hanahan at the hay-scales, he appeared to be bruised. Saw blood on his face. Did not see blood on his shirt. [Here considerable merriment was created in Court by the witness addressing the counsel as, My learned friend."] Witness helped to take Hanahan at the request of Mr. Kelly—Hanahan appeared outrageous. Bolger seemed to be excited because Mr. Kelly told him if it was fighting he wanted he would give him plenty of it tomorrow. John Green and Johnston Cardic accompanied witness to arrest Bolger. Witness led the way and knocked at the door.—He demanded admittance in Her Majesty's name. He spoke in a regular tone of voice. The people who were with him were not making a loud noise. Bolger had no axe in his hand when witness went to arrest him. Bolger was not smoking his pipe. He was standing with his face to the door, wife was at his back. Saw a blood on his hand. Will not re was blood on both hands. as a stain of blood on his right he mark appeared to be about of a penny-piece. He also saw blood on the back of his neck, the skin and partly on the shirt He found no knife. Heard that had washed himself in Bolger's. ay hand on Hanahan at all. REMARKS:

The ole or nearly the whole of the Timbe n market and to arrive this fall has no changed hands, the opinion gaining ground, that Pine Timber will command high prices next spring. There have been considerable transactions in White and Red Pine. Egan & Co. having, it is reported, sold all their stock to Gilmour & Co; but the price has remained private. Cougin's raft was also sold to the same parties. A very superior raft of Elm, (Kempt's) is finding purchasers by the dram at 1s 6d; but is of the choicest quality. There is no improvement as regards Oak, though higher prices are asked. Pine Deals have not been influenced to the same extent as Pine Timber, by the more encouraging accounts which the last one or two mails have brought to us from the other side of the Atlantic. Spruce Deals are scarce, but there is little or no demand. Staves are enquired for; £50 with Culls, and £50 10s for all Merchantable being obtainable.

FREIGHTS.—Several ships have taken up for Liverpool at about 41s, and to London 45s was paid.

To the Editor of the Monitor:

Smiths Falls, Oct. 1855.

SIR,—I sit down to give you all the information I have in regard to the unfortunate occurrence of the last few days in this neighborhood. A young man in the neighborhood of Pike Falls, in the township of North Elmsley by the name of Moore was accidentally shot while handling a gun carelessly. The father and son were working together in the woods and when they finished their work for the day the son a young man about 19 years of age went for the gun which was just at hand and took hold of the barrel and was pulling it towards him when it went off and the charge entered his body and he expired almost instantly. This occurred on Friday the 21st of September. On the same night at this place a man by the name of Haladay with others left Smiths Falls, late in the evening for their homes all being more or less intoxicated. In the morning two hats were found in the road about ¾ of a mile below Smiths Falls and on Tuesday morning following one of the three Haladays was found in the lower lock at old Sly's lock station about a mile below Smiths Falls, A Coroner's Inquest was held on Sunday, by Doctor Burnett the Coroner for this place, and the jury gave a verdict according to the evidence that the deceased came to his death by accident or by some cause unknown to them. The circumstances connected with the case appears as if there might have been some violence committed on the deceased, The party left Smiths Falls late in the evening and after they left a noise was heard as if persons were fighting upon the road and the hats found in the morning were those it is said that belonged to the two men that were with Haladay. Nothing was said about Haladay's disappearance until he was found in the lock. He was fractured in the fore part of the head and the scull was broken. At the inquest the two men were both examined and stated that they were so much intoxicated that they could not tell where they left Haladay.—Blood was seen upon the lock on Saturday morning and a bloody hankkerchief was found by some boys living in the neighborhood and from the appearance of the place where the blood was found Haladay might have fallen into the lock and his death caused by the fall. It is generally supposed that the death of Haladay is the consequence of foul play but as no conclusive evidence to that effect could be elicited by the jury the verdict of that body will be all that will in all probability, ever be heard of it.

On Saturday evening last another accident occurred by the bursting of a small cannon, A celebration was got up in honor of the victory gained by the Allies at Sebastopol. When firing the cannon burst and a young man was killed instantly by a piece of the metal hitting him in the side. His name was M'Breen a saddler and harness maker by trade. He was an active young man, and of good habits and had not been long a resident of the place; his former place of residence I believe was opposite Kingston on Long Island. I have given you all the information I have upon the occurrences of the last few days.

Yours truly.

THE CRIMEA A GOLD COUNTRY.—Dr. F. Maynard's "From Paris to Sebastopol" has the following: "If England and France were to take possession of the whole of the Crimea and wished, without keeping up an army of occupation at a vast expence to prevent Russia from ever re-establishing her power they have only to decree that henceforth the Crimea should be an independent state self-governed: and to attract thither, in less than a year as many millions of inhabitants as could be lodged on the soil it would be sufficient for them to declare the ports free and to plant on the Tchatir Dagh a banner inviting the gold-seekers of every nation to come and search its sides. In the rocks of the Tchatir the Dimirdgi, Sinab and Aluchta, there is enough to pay the expenses of a war if it lasted a century. Perhaps my readers may feel astonished at my making such a statement. They will be no less astonished if they knew the authorities on which I rely I do not merely appeal to geographical documents and the history of past time to prove infallibly that the goldmines of the Tchatir Dagh exist and have been worked, I also invoke the testimony of those who de visu de manu have seen and touched veins of gold more abundant a thousand-fold richer than those of the Ural and all the known mines. It suited the policy of the Czars to leave those mines unworked and to efface the recollection of them as far as possible. If they were worked by free men, that would have attracted from every corner of Europe a multitude of adventurers, men of enterprising character on a single point of the empire it would have been kindling a conflagration which they could not have mastered: if on the other hand serfs and prisoners were employed as miners, the Crimea was not like the Ural, so remote from Europe that the groans of the slave martyrs could be smothered and the might have escaped the fangs of the despot. The Russian Government consequently proclaims the auriferous strata of these mountains which evidently attach the Alps to the Caucasus, to be fabulous. The Crimea, within ten years will become the El Dorado of the Old World."
