Burdett-Coutts May Wed Mrs. Astor

MRS. JOHN JACOB ASTOR AND W. L. A. B. BURDETT-COUTTS, WHO MAY WED FAIR DIVORCEE.

London, Jan. 17.—British society is busy picking out possible husbands for the beautiful Mrs. Ava L. Willing Astor, who secured a divorce a year or so ago from Col. John Jacob Astor. The latest strong possibility is William Lehman Ashmead Bartlett-Burdett-Coutts. He seems to have passed Lord Curzon in society's betting book on the matrimonial race. Mrs. Astor was the guest of honor at a brilliant dance he gave recently in his Piccadilly mansion, and has received other marked attentions from him. But she's having such a good time being free that she may not risk another wedding.

Burdett-Coutts is about 60, somewhat older than Mrs. Astor. He was originally an American, but went to England in his youth and at 30 married the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, then 67. The marriage was really an adoption, for that had been the original intention of the aged but maiden philanthropist, whose immense inherited wealth had won her the baronial title in her own right. The adopted husband was interested in her philanthropies and succeeded to her name and estate when she died in 1906.

BUDGET FROM BOSTON GIRL

From Art to Artichokes in Cropley Square—Mrs. Pankhurst's Second Daughter Appeals to Massachusetts

Boston, Jan. 16.—From art to artichoke; from classic casts to modern French cooking. Many Bostonians are viewing with a little regret the rapid demolition of the historic structure in Copley square which for many years did service as the Museum of Fine Arts to make way for an up to date million dollar hotel. The roof is already practically removed, and it will be but a short time before the ornate facade of the well known landmark will be only a memory. Many residents of the Hub feel very much as if this destruction of one of the three principal features of Copley "Square" sounded the death knell of the famous triangle. It is promised that the vast hotel to be erected shall be an ornament to the city, and it is hoped that it at least may not strike too discordant a note in combination with Trnity Church and the Public Library. One regrets incidentally the passing of the old art school room on whose walls are many and heterogeneous examples of the diversions of one-time students some of whom are now famous artists.

Although Boston's new zoo is not far enough along to receive exhibits as yet, a "steampipe alligator" is attracting considerable attention in the old town. This interesting reptile was recently consigned to the Animal Rescue League, since when the League's troubles have been materially increased. The name "steampipe" originated in the fact that the alligator communes with himself in the privacy of his shallow tank at the top of the building in a manner resembling an overcharged steam radiator letting itself loose. Strong, loud, penetrating hisses, in prolonged gusts, lead the visitor to believe that the boiler room is located within ten feet and is about to blow everybody to eternity, or else that a thousand cats are spitting out their spite. Investigation proves that the sound emanates from a distance of several rooms and stairs, and that it is only Steampipe "phhh-hhhnghhh"-ing to himself, as a phonetically inclined newspaper man has interpreted it. The League admits that it could be induced to part with its watery guest, provided he was assured of a good home, and the future of Old Steampipe is a leading topic of discussion at its meetings. Anyone wanting a sound, well built alligator need not open his purse very wide.

"Pygmies throwing mudballs over the grave of Charles Sumner at a living giant" is a Boston newspaper's pat way of characterizing some of the speakers at the Sumner centenary which Boston has just been enjoying, if only for its truly Bostonese exchange of amenities and backhanded compliments. Against those orators who seemed to find that Sumner would have disapproved of some of the eminent services Mr. Lodge has rendered to the state and nation appeared the presentation by former Governor Guild of facts about the earlier Senator which are sometimes forgotten and which, while they do not detract from his essential greatness as statesman, prove that he was quite as human as any of the abler men of today. To the Boston girl the circumstance, now recalled, that Charles Sumner could not get along with his wife or his wife with him appears to be a damaging confession of temperamental weakness.

Telling Boston men to look out lest they, too, may have to imprison tender young girls for stirring up civil war, Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, a mere slip of youthful feminity, stood on the platform at Ford Hall, Jan. 11, and rehearsed the real story of militant happenings of her own country. Her audience, filling the thousand seats of the hall, applauded her at every turn. "(Who is Sylvia?" asked, with reminiscences of a classic song, many an old time time Bostonian when he heard that the second daughter of the British militant leader was coming here, while those of a younger generation hummed softely a music hall favorite of four or five years ago about "Sylvia," whose "bright eyes, like blue skies, shone out from golden hair." The visiting suffragette, as interviewed by several of the Hub's newspaper folk at the suffrage headquarters, 585 Boylston Street, proved not only to be personally as the songsters have sung but to have a grasp on her great subject that one would hardly expect of a girl of twenty-three. She has learned by doing, in the modern educational way, in the great rough and ready school of experience. Twice for disturbing the King's peace she has been in gaol. In the noisome, unventilated prison cell, where sleep is difficult from the all night ravings and cursings of the dregs of humanity in other cells, where the food is bad bread and indigestable gruel three times a day, she heard and saw things which, when simply rehearsed in clear forcible English have made well meaning Britons throw up their hands in horror that in the twentieth century in a highly civilized country such things can be, and which have already led to a small measure of prison reform in Albion. Miss Sylvia is an artist, trained in the art schools of Manchester, London and Venice; an author who has magazine articles and books to her credit, and an orator who possesses gifts similar to those of her brilliant mother. Truly a remarkable record of accomplishment for a modest, quiet, pink and white young person who has been in the hurly-burly of practical politics since her later teens. Her addresses in Boston and Cambridge were the second and third respectively in her American series, for she landed in New York only on Jan. 5. From New England she will go to the Middle West, explaining everywhere a message of hope to suffragists in a land where peaceful but vigorous methods is all that is needed rapidly to bring about truly democratic conditions of suffrage. The Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association has already brought to Boston and other cities of the Commonwelth many extraordinary clever women from the other side; it has never secured one whose pesonality was more delightful than that of Miss Sylvia Pankhurst.
