THROUGH ONTARIO WITH THE BRITISH-BORN

By Arthur Hawkes

Sault Ste. Marie, Aug. 23.—Once more the Scotch accent; this time in a large man with the big broad head that gets things done—Peter Faulkner to wit. A Liberal of many years; about to cast his first vote against a Liberal candidate, and a glad secretary of the Canada-British Association.

This was one of the men who happened to be at the station when I arrived. He was the only Scot. The rest were English. Harry Sargeant became chairman of the association—a man of substance, who has been through poor time and with whom the good times have surely come to stay.

Across the river the Michigan Soo, town three parts full of expatriated Canadians and home of a newspaper that comes over daily on the ferry; and pays court to the Canadian Soo, with abundant views of the cloisons. The border influence is a curious element in life here. On one street one heard the sound of the fire bell as they hear it in the states; on another the ticket box—the coffee pot of Toronto's peculiar affection—came around. The street, maybe looks a little more American than most Ontario streets; and you wander what the atmosphere of the hall would be like.

Well, there was a bulldog and a lumberjack on the floor, alongside the speaker's table; and the bulldog kept silence as long as he could; but when the audience loudly resented the interruptions of a too spirituously-minded person, the dog joined the racket and was led to a less exciting quarter.

They tell you that at the Soo things are very different from what they are "in the east." They like to think they are western. There is flavor of the bush and mines, as well as of the unsalted sea, about the place; and a quality of speech here and there, that is breezy after its own fashion. We met a prominent citizen who asked if he was going to the meeting—a grandson of Scotland, who has been in Scotland and liked it.

"You bet," said he, I'll be there with lard in my hair and my ears pinned back."

This originality is said to extend to the government side of electioneering. The candidate for whom the Minnie M. carried foreigners to poll where they gave fraudulent votes is the Liberal candidate again. The Minnie M., has ended her political career, but the bush poll is a menace to the dignity of the ballot box. I do not pretend fully to understand the peculiar ethics of bush polling; but I do know that the Englishman who is standing for re-election in West Algoma only fears defeat through unscrupulous use of opportunities in the remoteness of the bush.

Mr. Boyce is a Yorkshireman; a lawyer with brains. His speech very gently betrays him to his cause, for he comes from Wakefield. As far as I can learn there are no adventitious aids to his popularity and the British vote will have no difficulty in cleaving to him.

The Welsh are quite abundant at the Soo. Many of them are in the steel works, where they don't lose their gift of song.

North Bay.

I was only outside North Bay Station a couple of hours; but long enough to give the Globe correspondent an opportunity to perpetrate one of the most perfect examples of garbling I have ever seen. The secretary of the Sons of England very properly said that the society would have nothing to do with the meeting. This was distorted into an official repudiation of the British-born movement. "A local barrister," who turned out to be the mayor, was reported as entering the lists which lead to controversy with me, and disorder in the meeting and as being finally prevented from speaking. The facts were that the mayor imputed untruthfulness to me, which the meeting as well as I resented and compelled him to withdraw. Then when he was called to order for irrevelancy I offered him an additional ten minutes, I to have five for reply. He refused to accept the offer.

A branch of the Canada-British Association having been formed, the secretary of the Sons of England became its secretary

Brampton has less than three thousand population, but 20 per cent. of them are said to be British-born. The factories employ nearly all of them.

We were going away from the meeting where Canon Walsh had shown himself to be a Britisher through and through, and had said that he had been watching the movement, and saying nothing for several months.

"Do you know reading?' said the mechanic on my left.

"Through it many times, but only stayed off there once," said I.

"I come from just over the river, in the other county," he said.

"From Caversham?" O hazzarded.

"Yes," he said, "and I've been here here five years and I like it."

Another spoke:—"Have you ever been in Hereford?"

"Never in the city, but once I bought papers at the station and was called back for handing the bookstall clerk a bad two shilling piece."

The Hereford man looked at me doubtfully, and I [illegible] the question he didn't ask to his perfect content.

A little later we were drinking—oh, nothing worse than cider and ginger ale; for at Brampton they get their local option straight, when Secretary Akehurst observed that they were getting the effects of free trade in the old country, all right, all right. He had been reading of the railway strike.

Hereford made an interesting remark, "They don't get enough to buy good beer," he said, and further displayed a candid indifference to the cost of living, for there is more to live with in Brampton than there had ever been in the Welsh marshes.

I'm afraid they were both tariff reformers in the Old Country.
