GOVERNMENT—AND—PUBLIC RIGHTS

We'll go and fish now without consulting Mr. Fraser or any other "native." A quiet pool near the bridge has our attention, as it gives promise of good fishing; in fact we can see the finny gentlemen lying lazily on the bottom. A clean pebbly bar extends from the shore like a tongue, diagonally, to within some thirty feet of the second pier. We have fished for some time (suppositious case entirely) getting an odd feeble "rise" and are sanguine of hooking a fellow invested, in our imagination, with monstrous proportions and—

"I beg your pardon, sir," said a stalwart man "didn't you know that these grounds (applied to water) are leased and are therefore private property."

We apologize, plead ignorance and declare our intention to move further up. The man smiles. We look puzzle as the corners of his mouth twitch with suppressed merriment "My good man," says he patronizingly, "you have a good walk ahead of you. There are two individuals who have the exclusive right of fishing this stream for fifty miles above here. The farmer whose lands are bounded by these waters dare not use a spear or cast a fly from his own shore."

"Who's to stop them" say we.

"Bailiffs, water bailiffs everywhere. The Government must protect these people in their rights when the Treasury receives their money."

"Ah! they pay well for this exclusive privilege," we enquire with some interest.

"Well, I'm afraid not; about equal to the salary paid one of the many guardians, I've heard say."

At first we could hardly believe it possible that individual rights were thus legislated away in this or any part of the new world; that the very worst features of feudalism were in full power and force in our young Dominion. The idea of debarring a man from catching fish at any proper time of the year in a river which, in many instances, flowed through his land seemed so monstrous that we could not believe it till, on enquiry, we found it to be correct be in every particular. We don't blame any individual, or individuals for securing a right to fish fifty miles of a river for a nominal sum if he or they can; but we do blame the Government which inaugurated such a law. It committed a grevious wrong; it has insulted the intelligence and manhood of the country and the Government which perpetuates it cannot fail to be brought to the bar of public judgment to receive condign punishment sooner or later.

"Well sir, you'd better see Fraser," said the public guardian of private fishing rights, "he owns the Metapediac for twelve miles above here; you can't throw a line in any of those waters where salmon resort without laying yourself liable to a penalty." The officer is thanked for his courtesy and information and the kind way in which he performs a disagreeable duty, when the fisherman seeks the proprietor of the only fishing privileges of which he can avail himself, unless indeed, he is acquainted with the owners of the main river, and receives an invitation to cast his line where and when he will. In this respect these parties cannot be accused of exclusiveness, this kindness being often extended to persons who have no claim but that of the amenities due a stranger in a strange land.

"Ah," said Mr. Fraser, "I did not notice your out-going or I could have told you all this. You can have all the fishing you require on my waters at so much per diem ($4.00 to $6.00 per day he will find when he comes to settle his bill). If you do not choose to toil along the banks and wade from pool to pool you can secure a couple of Indians and a canoe for a very moderate figure and they know every place where a fish is to be found. Being a stranger you will find some such assistance indispensable. I advise you by all means to hire them while you stay." The "moderate figure" of the Aborigine is soon found to be on a par with Indian moderation in general, corresponding pretty evenly with the toll levied on your rod. If you are lucky you land from one to three salmon at a fearful expenditure of energy and muscle, but yet the excitement is such that all this is soon forgotten, if not, you whip the stream all day and then it must be fine fun for the salmon which look grimly up from their pebbly bed as at some circus gentleman performing and cutting strange antics for their especial benefit. At the end of three days he will find every exposed part of his body inflamed, and red as the back of a boiled lobster from the bites of every imaginable species of fly and every bone in his body as sore as if he had been energetically, but unsuccessfully, performing on the flying trapeze.

CHAPTER 5.

THE I. C. RAILROAD,—THE MEN WHO RUN IT—CAR ACCOMMODATION—MACHINE AND CAR SHOPS AT CAMPBELLTON—THE ENGINE CLEANER—TAKING NOTES UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

We may premise by saying that we had been a diligent reader of the Watchman and Times. From these we had learned that the management of the I. C. R. was such as menaced the safety of the traveler at every turn. How could it be otherwise? Was it not run by the Mackenzie Government, the most corrupt on the face of the earth! Every accident preventible and unavoidable was used as political capital and finally the farce was enacted of bringing forward a case of suicide or murder, it matters not which, that took place on this line, as a charge against the rulers of the land. Without any particular leaning for either party we may say that we think "politics run mad" could proceed no further than this.

Premising this, it will be supposed that we noted everything in this connection which came under our observation by the way, and that we diligently enquired into all matters bearing on this point. The first thing that strikes the traveller is

THE EXCELLENCE OF THE ROAD BED.

We have passed over many, east and west, in Canada and the States, but on none have we been more comfortable or conveyed with more celerity and certainty to our destination. A newspaper can be conned almost as easily as if seated at home in an easy chair, while running at a speed of thirty miles per hour, or over, which is more than we can say for any other road of our acquaintance. It may be said that the present management are not entitled to any credit for this; that the excellence of the way is not of their making, but simply a result of faithful construction. They who argue thus have little knowledge of the work which they undertake to criticize. In any country a railroad needs the most unremitting and careful supervision that the track may at all conform as near as possible to a plane; but in this northern region of frost and snow the vagaries of sleepers, which seem to have a constant desire to regain their growing position, and drifts of vast proportions which never present the same phases twice in succession, tax the vigilance and forethought of section, "bosses" and superintendent to the very utmost. Every human agency, involving boundless expenditure, has been put in requisition to ensure the success of this great highway. At all exposed positions, or as far as practicable, snow fences have been erected, and covered sheds, from a few hundred yards
