THIRTY-NINE PAINTINGS, as follows:
Edinburgh, News of Battle after Flodden, by Thos. Jones Barker £120 0 0
"Round him rush the people crying, 'Tell us all, oh, tell us true!
Where are they who went to battle, Randolph, Murray, sworn to you?
Where are they, our brothers, children? Have they met the English foe?
Why art thou alone, undefended? Is it well, or is it so?"
Lists to curtain the grisly warrior looks from out his helm of steel;
But no word he speaks in answer, only with his armed heel
Chides his weary steed, and onward up the city streets they ride;
Fathers, sisters, mothers, children, shrieking, praying by his side.
'By the God that made thee, Randolph! tell us what misfortune hath come!'
Then he lifts his riven banner, and the sisters voice is dumb."

VETERINARY HOSPITAL.

MR. TURNER (late acting V. S. to H. M.'s 7th Regiment of Hussars) begs to inform his numerous Friends, that he has, in compliance with their wish to that effect, RESUMED his PRACTISE as a VETERINARY SURGEON, and is for the present to be found at Mr. PATERSON'S Stables, in rear of Little St. James Street. Mr. TURNER hopes, in a short time, to make arrangements for larger Premises, a Sloaing Establishment, &c.

Montreal, August 22, 1850. 169

WASHING COMPOUND.

THIS COMPOUND has been proved to be superior to everything for WASHING CLOTHES, and is cheaper than Soap. The Clothes only require to be soaped in water, a little of it, and thoroughly rinsed, to make them cleaner and brighter than by the usual mode of washing. It saves all the labor, and fully two-thirds of the expense of the usual system.

Certificates have been left at the Store of Wm. Lyman & Co., St. Paul Street, where all necessary information will be given.

The Subscriber will be found at BUCLOS' HOTEL, and will inform purchasers what are the ingredients.

WM. G. ANDREWS.

Eating up the Pig.

What crocodiles were in Egypt, what cows are in Bengal, or storks in Holland, pigs are here, with this trifling difference—their sacredness is character lasts but as long as their mortal coil; and this is abbreviated without ceremony, and from the most wordly motives. In life, the pig is free—is honored; he ranges the streets; he exposes in thoroughfares; he walks between your horse's legs, or your own; he is everywhere respected; but let the thread of his existence be severed; and, shade of Mahomet! what a change! They think in Cincinnati of making but the most of him. How many of this kind perish annually, to cement the vast prosperity of that city, cannot be told. About 15 years ago, when it contained only one-fifth of its existing population, a few bold speculators began the trade. Selecting the hams and sides of the animal, they made pickled pork; of the rest they took small account. Soon, however, the idea occurred to one more acute than his fellows, that the heads and feet—nay, even the spine and the vertebræ—might be turned to account. Trotters and cheeks had their partisans, and these parts looked up in the market. About this time the makers of sausages caught the inspiration; they found those luxuries saleable; and so many pigs were to be slaughtered, that the butchers were willing to do it for nothing; that is to say, for the perquisite of the entrails and offal alone. The next step was due to the genius of France.

A Frenchman established a brush manufactory, and created a market for the bristles; but his ingenuity was outdone by one of his own countrymen, who soon after arrived. This man determined, it seems, to share the spoils; and thinking nothing else left, collected the fine hair or wool, washed, dried and curled it, and stuffed mattresses with it. But he was mistaken in thinking nothing else left. As but little was done with the lard, they invented machines and squeezed oil out of it; the refuse was then thrown away. Mistaken men again! This was the substance of stearine candles, and made a fortune to the discoverer of the secret. Lastly came one who could press chemistry into the service of mammon. He saw the blood of countless swine flowing through the gutters of the city; it was all that was left of them, but it went to his heart to see it thrown away. He pondered long, and then collecting the streams into reservoirs, made prussiate of potash from it by the ton. The pig was used up.—Cincinnati paper.

THE CUP OF GOOD ALE.—He is not deserving of the name of Englishman who speaketh against ale, that is good ale, like that which has just made merry the hearts of this poor family; and yet there are beings, calling themselves Englishmen, who say that it is a sin to drink a cup of ale, and who, on coming to this passage, will be tempted to fling down the book and exclaim, "The man is evidently a bad man, for, behold, by his own confession, he is not only fond of ale himself, but is in the habit of tempting other people with it." Alas, alas! while a number of silly individuals there are in this world. I wonder what they would have had me to do in this instance? Given the afflicted family a cup of cold water? Go to! They could have found water in the road, for there was a pellucid spring only a few yards distant from the house, as they were well aware; but they wanted not water. What should I have given them? Meat and bread? Go to! They were not hungry. There was stifled sobbing in their bosoms, and the first mouthful of strong meat would have choked them. What should I have given them? Money? What right would I have to insult them by offering them money? Advice? words, words, words; friends, there is a time for everything; there is a time for a cup of cold water; there is a time for strong meat and time for advice after a cup of ale. Ale has say many cups; the tongue then speaks more smoothly, and the ear listeneth more benignantly; but why do I attempt to reason with you? Do I not know you for conceited creatures, with one idea, and that a foolish one; a crotchet, for the sake of which ye would sacrifice anything, religion if required, country? There, fling down my book, I do not wish you to walk any further in my company, unless you cast your idolatry away, which ye will never do, for it is the breath of your nostrils; fling down my book, it was not written to support a crotchet, for, know one thing, my good people, I have invariably been an enemy to humbug.—Lavengro; the Scholar, the Gipsy, the Priest.

JOAN OF ARC.—A work recently published at Paris, is an elaborate examination of the trial, condemnation, and execution of the Maid of Orleans, which completely exonerates the English from the odium of having had hand or part therein. She was tried by the Holy Inquisition, condemned by the Inquisition, executed by the Inquisition. The charges against her were purely and wholly ecclesiastical; her trial was conducted in the purest ecclesiastical forms; she was convicted of sorcery, witch, or heretic; and in virtue of ecclesiastical laws, she was sentenced and burned. The English had no more to do with her trial than with the condemnation of Socrates. If she had never defeated them—never fallen into their hands—her fate would have been the same. Not the slightest trace of their participation is to be discovered in any of the proceedings; or even in any one of the numerous interrogatories to which she was subjected. She was a victim to the atrocious fanaticism of her time, and nothing more; her judges and executioners, her own countrymen, blinded by fanaticism, saw in her only the dabbler in evil spirits, and thought not of her glory or patriotism; and in no respect whatsoever were they instruments of the English. All this, I am aware, is well known to the learned student; but it is not the last gentleman of to-day to be easily admitted, and loudly proclaimed by a French writer, who has spent the trouble (the first time it has ever been thoroughly done) to examine, with scrupulous care, the proceedings, the testimonies of witnesses, the interrogatories of the accused, as recorded evidence. In a word, all the multitudinous papers connected with this extraordinary case. Hitherto almost all Frenchmen have, either directly or indirectly, cast on the English the moral responsibility of this abominable judicial assassination; foreign writers have done the same; and even the English themselves, from over-hasty conclusions, have joined in the general cry against them. But henceforth this cannot be; the French themselves are constrained to admit that not one drop of the heroine's blood falls on the English head.—*Paris Correspondent
