RADWAY'S READY RELIEF

The True Relief.

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF

For Internal and External Use.

In using medicines to stop pain we should avoid such as inflict injury on the system. Opium, Morphine, Chloroform, Ether, Cocaine and Chloral stop pain by destroying the sense of perception, the patient losing the power of feeling. This is a most destructive practice; it masks the symptoms, shut up, and, instead of removing trouble, breaks down the stomach, liver and bowels, and, if continued for a length of time, kills the nerves and produces local or general paralysis.

There is no necessity for using these uncertain agents when a positive remedy like RADWAY'S READY RELIEF will stop the most excruciating pain quicker, without entailing the least danger in either infant or adult.

It instantly stops the most excruciating pains, allays inflammation and cures congestions, whether of the Lungs, Stomach, Bowels or other glands or mucous membranes.

HER EARNEST TROTH

CHAPTER XX.

"Pressed Against the Window Pane."

"What a clear, cold day it is, doctor; don't you enjoy it?"

"Well, yes, madame, it is nice walking; and these are such picturesque grounds."

"They are, indeed. That convict fellow is in luck to have them kept waiting for him by such a splendid creature as Lady Lufton."

"You don't mean to tell me, madame, that she is mad enough to contemplate giving this grand old place to such a master?"

"Indeed, I do! You see, we women do so enjoy being a little mad; I am indulging in a trifle that way myself."

"You, madame! Why, you are the most truly sensible woman I know."

The doctor smiled down upon the daintly little figure in its costly draperies of rich-tinted velvet. Madame was looking her best today, and her face was alight with an unusual excitement.

"Come, madame, tell me your madness."

They were standing on the margin of a steel-like lake, which reflected the drifting mountains of snow-white clouds, which crept stealthily before the red face of the winter sun.

"I am going to be married, doctor!"

Madame's breath came fast, and with an appealing look up into the dark, stern face above her, said, with a nervous laugh:

A blank filled Dr. Pyne's heart. What should he do without his little sympathizing friend in his lonely life? He looked at her inquiringly, and she rushed on at a white heat:

"And, what is more, you are to be my husband. Don't say you won't have me, because I know you will, when you have given the matter thought. And, what is more, you great, ill-used, lonely, fellow, you'll learn to love me, too. I mean to make you. Don't worry about it now, please; talk of something else, I am in no hurry. I have waited for you these ten years, so have served an apprenticeship to patience."

The doctor looked amused. He thought it was some of her nonsense, put on, like her prettiest bonnet, for his benefit.

"Silly little goose," he said, half sadly, "why you'd weary of your fetters in a fortnight."

"Should I?"

"Yes, and quarrel with me ever after."

"Well, you have no one to quarrel with now, and you can't think what a relief a row is sometimes."

"A doubtful blessing. Well, suppose I took you at your word, fair lady, what would you do?"

"Be grateful," said she seriously, so seriously that he lost some of his first persuasion that she was joking, and, taking her hand, continued:

"Can you tell me in all sincerity and sense of its seriousness, that you would be glad to have me for a husband?"

"Yes."

"You mean it?"

"I do."

"Do you know that I have no love to give my wife?"

"I do, but I can wait; that will come with time. I can be patient."

"Silly little soul! Why do you wish to renounce your freedom for such a doubtful bondage?"

His dark eyes watched every change in the perturbed face before him. A strange confusion disturbed the saucy, defiant little lady; she tried to hum a tune, looked across the lake, up at the sky, everywhere but into the quiet, questioning eyes above her; then she covered her flushed face with a shaking hand and tears welled through the dainty gloved fingers; her little figure shook with suppressed sobs.

A great compassion came to Dr. Pyne, a new light lit up their long years of friendship; and, stooping over her, he took the trembling hand from the shamed face, saying in a softened voice:

"Is it possible that you realy care for this soured, crabbed old bachelor?"

Madame drooped her head over his hand, saying:

"God only knows how much."

Dr. Pyne was so surprised that he could think of nothing to do but kiss the pretty face. This roused madame from her dejection; tossing back her head she said:

"Don't rub my eyes so hard, they will look so red, and I feel as if my nose resembled a cherry."

"Little vanity," said the doctor. "I must cure you of that when you are my wife."

Madame looked up swiftly, saying:

"Has the forlorn hope, which I led so gallantly, resulted in a complete surrender?"

With a courtly bow the doctor replied lightly:

"Indeed, it has, so we must decide to jog on together on life's footpath, making light of the rucks and furrows."

A new light seemed to leap into his eyes, a new dignity to have filled his carriage. It was good to feel that someone appreciated him, someone who did not disgrace him. It gave him back the self-respect he had lost in his pursuit of Bethel, and altogether he decided that madame deserved his gratitude. He held the little hand upon his arm and felt brighter for having the dainty little figure beside him.

"What would you say, doctor, if I were to tell you I have only been joking?"

He stopped in his walk and confronted the little woman with stern set face, saying in a chill tone:

"I should say, madame, that it was unworthy of your kind heart to trifle with a man already sick unto death of a mental misery. Come, there must be no more nonsense, madame; will you be my wife?"

Already repenting her foolish speech, madame gave him a coquettish look, saying:

"Well, now you put it in that light, I don't mind if I do. You see, I wanted you to ask me to complete the piece."

Madame pressed her lips to his coat-sleeve lovingly, and he said in a lighter tone:

"Then, now it's all settled, you must not tease your poor foolish old man again."

Here Brinley's approach broke up their confidential talk, and as he joined them, Dr. Pyne said:

"Is it true that we are to have quite a dinner party tonight?"

"Yes, I am glad to say we are; it is quite time Lady Lufton lightened her retirement a little; time goes apace."

"It does, indeed, said madame. "The dear girl's year of mourning is up today, and I am sure that she must be grateful, for moping is not her line of business."

"No, I believe not," said Brinley. "Lady Lufton, like the rest of her sex, loves excitement and gayety."

"Quite right, too," remarked Dr. Pyne, always loyal to his lost love. "There is nothing like a judicious amount of enjoyment to keep one young and pretty. Here comes our hostess; I fancy she needs change, she has lost much of her old high spirit."

"Ah, and with her is that sweet sonsie lassie, Miss Margery. Where are you off to?" called out madame's clear, quiet tones.

"To the village," replied Bethel. "Will you come? I want to introduce you to my poor old mother; and you, too, Dr. Pyne, for I want your opinion of her. I fear she is not so well as usual; Brinley and Margery here know her, and I am sure will join us."

"Indeed we will," said Brinley, and Margery smiled gratefully at him for his ready assent. The party set off for the pleasant walk, through budding hedgerows, to the village. They came to a pretty little cottage, and Bethel led her guests into the sleeping-room where, before a cheerful wood fire, sat the old invalid, a patient smile illuminating her aged face, and giving it a placid look of quiet content and gratitude which made the old woman's face beautiful. She received her guests with simple dignity, and with honest unfeigned pride and delight in their presence. When her daughter kissed her, she whispered:

"I hope you came up street, Beth, and let the neighbors see you are not ashamed of your mother?"

Bethel smiled, and assured her that all was as she wished.

Bethel seated at her mother's feet, in a simple morning gown, was a fair picture. She seemed to cast off all worldly taint in the humble house, and to become once more pure, gentle and lovable. Brinley thought he had never seen her to such advantage, and he sighed as he wished she was always so worthy of respect and love.

A few days later the old manor house was filled with guests, and Bethel was busy providing them with amusements. Madame proposed that they should have some private theatricals, and Bethel's tastes and talents lying that way, she readily consented. The old place was the scene of merry confusion. The rehearsals were held in the library under Bethel's tuition, and very enjoyable they were. Bethel seemed to revive under the excitement and Dr. Pyne looked on approvingly, admiring little madame's sense and taste, and the never-failing merriment which made everyone her friend raised his self-esteem, which had been abashed by Bethel's refusal, so much that he felt a great pride in the love of this bright, clever, little woman. So madame, under the new aspect of affairs, bade fair to catch his heart in the rebound, for already he sought her out and derived great comfort in her society.

THE TURF.

WOODBINE RESULTS.

Toronto, June 3.—One favorite and a split favorite landed at the Woodbine today. The weather was fine and track fast. The fourth race was the event of the day, and the success of the new Kirkfield stable, belonging to the Mackenzies, sons of the street railway president, pleased the crowd. Wire In's time, 2:10½, was within three-quarters of a second of the track record, made by Bannockburn. Wire In made his own running all the way, and it seemed a long drive at the finish. In the fifth race, the Thornfield steeplechase, Buffer, ridden by Graham, fell at the pigpen and badly injured his rider, who was unconscious for some minutes, and had to be carried from the field to the clubhouse. Results:

First race, Darbar purse, $400, for 4-year-olds and upward, selling, 6 furlongs—Andrattus, 102 (M. Johnson), 8 to 5, won by a length; Calthness, 102 (J. Daly) 4 to 1, 2; Malden, 108 (J. Walsh), 3 to 1, 3. Time, 1:16½.

CORRIGAN TO BE AT DETROIT.

Ed Corrigan's familiar colors, green and wide sash, which have been carried so prominently on both sides the Atlantic, will be much in evidence at Detroit, as the former master of Hawthorne has determined to send ten horses to the Grosse Point track, in charge of the veteran trainer, James Davis. Two of these, McGowan and Rave, by Riley-Miss May, by Ravelstone-Sacharissa, will, so says Mr. Corrigan, start in the International, and with the former he has strong hopes of winning this important stake. Ed Corrigan, though of Irish descent, is Canadian born, so has determined to give former associates a chance to see some of the high-class horses he lately brought from England. In consequence he will send to Detroit the flying L'Etrenne, the trusty Rose Tree, Fancy Man, winner of the $10,000 Prince Edward handicap at Manchester, England; Western Duke, Cemper Vigilans, and Artena, the last two, like Rose Tree, engaged in the Campau handicap. Andy Blakely, the well-known steeplechase rider, is also preparing to ship three horses to Detroit. George B. Havill has four destined for the same bourne, and George Robertson will start with the 3-year-olds, Annola and Dropp, and the 2-year-olds Bonnie Chance and Humming Bird, all good-looking and well-bred youngsters, which have never so far faced the flag.

PROUD OFFICIALS WERE DEFEATED

Went Down Ignominiously Before the Newspaper Team—Score 14 to 9.

However proficient city officials may be in other walks of life, it was shown plainly yesterday that baseball was not their forte. At least they allowed a team representing the newspapers of this city to defeat them, and surely that is proof positive that they're low-grade ball players. Seven innings of the warmest kind of ball were played, at the end of which the score stood 14 to 9 in favor of the typos. The last of these seven was the inning in which the printers won their game. The officials went clean to the bad then, and nine runs were scored. This is not likely to be the end of a long-standing and deep-rooted rivalry. The city team had often said that the printers would be "easy money." The latter proved themselves to be elegant ball players, individually and collectively, and that is the cause of all the heavy hearts at the city hall now. On the other hand, the winners are congratulating themselves and feeling much relieved. The officials made so many proud boasts that for some time before the match there was shakiness in the knees of the typos. Now they scorn to look upon these city hall fellows, don't cher know. The seventh inning was so convincing of superiority. And yet the justly proud printers may condescend to give the officials satisfaction if the gauntlet is thrown down again.

Three league players were among the printers' force, but any individual superiority was more than counterbalanced by the presence of Police Magistrate Love, who played the game of the day for the officials on the second point, and tried hard to help his team to win. It must be confessed that the city hall men had the game up till that time. But the point is that the pace was too strong for them, and that they could not keep it up. They had a team of old ball players all the way through, several of the printers were practically new at the game, Messrs. Gorman and Ed Stein, for example. The game was a magnificent exhibition of ball. Some fine fielding was done and good hits made. The scoring was done chiefly on errors. The printers modestly decline to make special mention of any of their team. Mr. Thomas Gillean refereed satisfactorily. Score is as follows:
