CHAPTER I

A FAMILY JAR.

ONE of the most beautiful places in the State of New York may be found a few miles back of the waters of the Hudson River, and having a delightful view of that beautiful stream.

Upon a green, sloping hillside a wide-roofed, low cottage farmhouse stands embowered in a group of grand old trees—elms—whose loftly heads have bowed before ten thousand storms, and yet they lift them as proudly as ever.

A garden of bright-hued flowers extends from the ivy-covered porch in front of the house to the green buckthorn hedge, and between the hedge and the road a smooth, sloping bank of green intervenes, for the cottage stands a little back from the road.

Broad fields, cultivated to their fullest extent, lie all around, and a wide belt of woodland bounds the farm upon two sides, extending back upon the hill. Back of the low farmhouse are the orchards, now in the springtime white with apple blossoms and pink with the bloom of the peach tree.

In the wide, white-floored kitchen a plump, pleasant-faced motron is wetting the tops of several loaves of brown bread, preparatory to putting them in the brick oven, within which the fire is roaring and crackling.

This is Mrs. Mellen, and her three daughters are in the room with her—three as handsome, blooming young ladies as one could select from among a thousand.

The eldest, Annabell, called Belle, was stirring a bowl of eggs for the Indian corn pudding which stood in the earthen pot, waiting, beside the brown bread, for the fire to be taken from the oven.

May, the second daughter, was filling the pumpkin pies, 'to set in the mouth of the oven,' as Mrs. Mellen had said. She was humming a low, sweet snatch of song, and ever and anon glancing out of the window, through the blossoms of the pear trees, along the grass-bordered road.

Goldie, the youngest, and pet of the whole family, was sitting upon a low rocking chair, pouting her cherry lips, and pulling the leaves from a spar of apple blossoms which she held in her hand, and letting the white and scented leaves fall upon her dainty white Marseilles apron, so prettily braided with black and ruffled at the edge.

The sisters were aged respectively twenty, eighteen, and sixteen.

Belle, the eldest, was tall and dark, with rich, creamy complexion and brilliant cheeks and lips. Her features were regular and not too large, and her jet-black hair curled in smooth even ringlets that were always bound away from her face with a scarlet ribbon. She was called by her admirers the handsomest of the three sisters.

In disposition she was proud and determined, and never forgave a wrong, whether real or fancied. Her figure was magnificent, not too large nor yet too delicate, but full, perfectly developed and proportioned. If she had been born to a crown she might have worn it royally.

The second daughter, May, was of slight, graceful form, had clear hazel eyes, and perfectly transparent skin. Her mouth was small, and its expression of great sweetness. If the proud beauty of Belle's mouth expressed her willful, passionate temperament, then the peaceful calm of May's face bore evidence of the angelic soul within her graceful form. Her shining brown hair was put smoothly away from her fair oval face, and gathered in one massive, graceful curl at the back of the head.

May's admirers decided that she was the handsomest, as well as the best, of Farmer Mellen's daughters.

But Goldie, pretty little Goldie Mellen, was one of those exquisite little mortals that defy description. She was always beautiful, but her beauty seemed never to be twice alike. Her hair was of that exquisite golden tint so praised in poets' song and copied by the old masters of painting, but which is seen in real living beauty but once in a lifetime—at least upon one head.

She was a dear, wilful little darling, growing vexed at everything which chanced to cross her, and flying out of temper at every word not pleasing to her ladyship, but sorry for her naughty temper the next moment, and ready to be forgiven. No person could be vexed with her. She was charming even in her pettish moods.

In form she was scarcely yet developed, but promised to be extremely graceful. Her eyes were sparkling with a purple-blue shade this morning, as she sat in the low rocking-chair, scattering the leaves of the apple blossoms over her white apron.

Farmer Mellen idolized this child, and loved her more than all the others. He entered the low kitchen this morning, with his blue-check frock and wide-brimmed hat, proclaiming him the farmer that he was.

"What's the matter, pet? Who has been plaguing Goldie?" he asked, stopping to pat her showering, curling, golden hair.

"Matter enough, I should think!" she exclaimed, pulling vigorously at the leaves of the branch from the apple tree, now that the blossoms were all destroyed.

Belle and May exchanged glances across the table, and Mrs. Mellen smiled without looking up. Farmer Mellen took the pouting little damsel from the low chair, letting the apple blossoms scatter over the snow-white floor. Seating her upon his knee, he drew her curly head down to his rough-clad shoulder, and holding it there with his toil-hardened hand, he asked:

"What have they said to you, Goldie?"

"It's Belle and May. They have coaxed mother to say I can't go over to the old house with the party who are going for a ride this afternoon. Belle is afraid there'll be somebody there to take the shine off her! The great vain thing!" exclaimed the irritated Goldie, in answer to her father's question.

"What's the reason Goldie can't go, mother?" he asked.

"I haven't said she could not go. I merely told her it would be better for her to stay at home, as the other girls were both going. I shall need somebody here to help me to get supper. You know who is coming to-night," answered the farmer's wife, a glorious smile of mother-love lighting up her face.

"Yes, I know Christopher is coming home from college; but he'll stop at the old house where the young folks are going to have their frolic. He'll come home with our girls, and it won't hurt him in the least to wait for his supper; if it is not ready. Of course, he'll stop at the old house!" continued the farmer.

"Of course he will!" blazed Goldie; "and it is because Frank Whitney and Ned Cameron are coming with him that Belle and May are determined to keep me at home. I'll flirt with your beaus, young ladies, see if I don't!"

"Hush! hush! you are getting excited, pet," remonstrated the father.

"Let her scold; she'll be down on her knees in ten minutes!" exclaimed Belle spitefully.

"Oh, Belle!" said May. "You forget dear little Goldie is only a child."

"Yes, only a child! You were as fast for me to stay at home as Belle was. You'll both get your pay for this! Only a child!" retorted the angry litle Goldie.

"Come, come, girls! Don't get to quarreling," laughed Mrs. Mellen looking up at the top of the oven to see if the bricks were of a white heat.

"They shan't tease Goldie, anyhow," said the farmer. "If anyone goes to the party, you shall go, sis."

Goldie's blue eyes flashed triumphantly; she knew her father's will to be law in the house.

"We didn't say much about her going," explained Belle.

"We were thinking of mother," said May. "There is a great deal to be done to-day. Saturday afternoon, and company coming."

Belle lifted her dark eyes scornfully, exclaiming half audibly:

'Precious little she will do of the housework!'

'I don't care for what you say, so there! I'll not go to the old house one step; but when you come home with Christy and your beaus—well, no matter—they will all stay four weeks. I'll show you what the child can do!'

One of the latest prominent gentlemen to speak highly in Zam Buk's favour is Mr. C. E. Sanford of Weston, King's Co., N.S. Mr. Sanford is a Justice of the Peace for the County, and a member of the Board of School Commissioners. He is also Deacon of the Baptist Church in Berwick. Indeed it would be difficult to find a man more widely known and more highly respected. Here is his opinion of Zam-Buk. He says:—

"I never used anything that gave me such satisfaction as Zam-Buk. I had a patch of Eczema on my ankle which had been there for over 20 years. Sometimes also the disease would break out on my shoulders. I had applied various ointments and tried all sorts of things to obtain a cure, but in vain. Zam-Buk, unlike everything else I had tried, proved highly satisfactory and cured the ailment.

"I have also used Zam-Buk for ferning piles, and it has cured them completely also. It is a comfort in helping my brother men, and if the publication of my opinion of the healing value of Zam-Buk will lead other sufferers to try it, I should be glad. For the relief of suffering caused by Piles, Skin Diseases I know of nothing to equal Zam-Buk."

Zam-Buk cures ulcers, abscesses, blood-poison, ring-worm, festering or running sores, bad legs, varicose ulcers, salt rheum, prairie itch, cuts, burns, bruises, baby's sores, etc. Purely herbal. 50c box, druggists and Stores. Refuse imitations.
