CHARGED WITH MURDER

The Approaching Trial of Mrs. Carrothers,

Who Is Alleged to Have Made Away With Her Husband.

A Review of the Case and the Circumstances Resulting in the Arrest of the Accused.

At Port Arthur to-day, before Chief Justice Armour, Mrs. Nettie Carrothers was arraigned on the charge of having on Jan. 3, 1891, deliberately murdered her husband, Thomas Blake Carrothers, to whom she had been married but a few years. The trial promises to be of intense interest throughout the Province and specially so to residents of this section, where the parties directly concerned are well-known. Many of the relatives of the man alleged to have been murdered reside in Westminster and the adjoining townships. "While there is no doubt that a true bill for murder will be returned by the grand jury," says a correspondent, "it is by no means certain that the petit jury will commit the accused. Since Phœbe Campbell was hanged in London for the murder of her husband at the instigation of the hired man, Coyle, more than two decades since, no Ontario jury has sent a woman to the scaffold, though that there have been many cases where they were equally guilty with the sterner sex is evidenced by the Stillwell murder in Elgin, the Finlay tragedy in Sombra, the Davis murder in Belleville, and perhaps half a dozen others where woman's unfaithfulness to her marriage vows provided a motive for the 'removal' of her husband."

BEFORE THE TRAGEDY.

In February, 1886, Thomas Blake Carrothers, a resident of Blanshard township, Perth county, near St. Marys, Ontario, was married to Nettie Slack, daughter of a well-known farmer of that township. Three years later Carrothers was engaged by William Fotheringham to accompany him to Rainy River, there to manage his saw mill. In June, 1890, Carrothers and his wife arrived, and three months later reports began to circulate of the alleged intimacy of Fotheringham and Mrs. Carrothers. These reports reached the ears of the husband, and he taxed his wife with infidelity. She stoutly denied the accusation, but subsequent events lent color to the suspicions of the husband.

On Dec. 14, 1890, Carrothers returned home unexpectedly and found Fotheringham in the house, but the latter gave a plausible excuse for his presence. Two weeks later Carrothers again found his employer in the house, and this time he was scuffling with Mrs. Carrothers. The angry husband told him to leave the place, and promised that he would kill him if he ever caught him in the house again. Fotheringham left for Rat Portage.

THE CRIME.

On Jan. 3, 1891, Carrothers was found dying on the floor of his cabin from the effects of two bullet wounds in his head. Mrs. Carrothers told her neighbors that at 10:30 on the morning of the 3rd she had gone about 150 feet away from the house to draw a pail of water from the river, and upon her return she had found her husband in the condition described. A pistol lay beside him and he was nearly lifeless when she discovered him. She also said that she did not hear any shots fired during her short absence.

Just after the shooting Fisher and Mrs. Carrothers went up into the garden of the house and returned in about half an hour with a note, which they said they had found in the pocket of an old coat belonging to Carrothers. This note, which was written on a half-sheet of dirty note paper, read:

"My Dear Friend,—I have taken trouble to my heart. For the last two weeks or more I have got worse. I have got to hate my wife and family. I often feel like blowing their brains out, but I am bound to put an end to myself. I am going to riddle my head with balls from back to front. I want you to accuse nobody of the bad deed but myself. Tell Ellen to go home to her father and mother, where she will be well looked after. Whoever finds this I want them to publish it in every paper to let people know what loss of property can do. This is my last words on earth. T. B. CARROTHERS."

PRELIMINARY INVESTIGATION.

An inquest was held at Rainy River, but the jury disagreed, three favoring a verdict of murder, while the remaining eight, of whom Fisher was one, held to the theory of suicide. Parties who were not satisfied with the result of the inquest sent a petition to the Ontario Attorney-General's office, asking for a thorough investigation into the facts. Detective Murray was placed on the case, and he arrived at the conclusion that Carrothers had been murdered. On Aug. 13, 1891, he arrested Mrs. Carrothers at the house of a relative in Toronto, where she was visiting. She was taken to Rat Portage, where she was finally committed for trial.

STRONG CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE

will be offered by the Crown. William Cameron, of Morley township, postmaster and justice of the peace, was present in the house the day following the murder talking to the prisoner, when she suddenly climbed up a ladder to the attic. Five minutes later she called up Fisher, and Cameron heard them whispering together. The two then came down stairs and Fisher handed Cameron the note above referred to, and alleged to have been found in Carrothers' pockets, in which suicide was threatened. Connor O'Dea, of Toronto, an acknowledged expert on hand-writing, will swear that the note was written by a woman, and that the hand-writing is identical with that of letters which are acknowledged to have been written by the prisoner.

What the man Fisher will swear to is conjectural. Fisher arrived at Carrothers' house before the man died, but he claims that Carrothers was unable to speak. Mrs. Carrothers in her statement at the inquest testified that the tragedy occurred while she was at the creek obtaining a pail of water. Fisher will swear that there was no water in the house when he arrived, as he searched for some to wash the deceased's face. He will further swear that there was no hole cut in the ice on the river, and that he had to return for an axe before he could obtain water. Fisher's account of the finding of the note in Carrothers' pocket is also regarded by the prosecution as important. When he went upstairs in response to her call he says he found her looking in a trunk for some papers, and it seemed to him as if her searching was like an aimless passing of her hands over the papers. She remarked that her husband must have left some paper and she wanted Fisher to help her find it. She then walked straight toward a large packing case, threw aside some bedclothes, and, picking up a black coat, held it towards Fisher and said: "Look in that." Fisher put his hand in the pocket and pulled out the note printed above. Fisher will testify that the woman did not seem at all perturbed about her husband's death, but spoke lightly throughout, her principal anxiety being as to the course she was to pursue to secure the $1,000 insurance on his life. "They can not do anything to me after the inquest, can they?" was one of the queries she propounded.

Drs. Macdonald and Phair, who examined the corpse, will testify that from the course of the bullets it would have been impossible that the injured man could have fired two shots.

Fotheringham is not connected with the murder by the prosecution. Neighbors will give evidence as to his intimacy with Mrs. Carrothers.

THERE SHOULD BE NO TROUBLE WITH THE BABY.

It Becomes a Joy, If Fed Properly.

There should be no difficulties, no fears, no heart sorrows about your baby's condition, dear mother, if you are willing to be guided by wisdom and experience.

Your baby is sickly and delicate, simply because you are not feeding it properly. It is not the amount of food you administer, or the number of times it is fed per day; it is the quality and peculiar preparation of the diet that must be considered.

Thousands of our best physicians declare that, in order to nourish an infant properly when it is deprived of good healthy breast milk, or only partially sustained by it, a food must be used which combines all the properties of the mother's milk.

The only food which truly combines all the nutritive ingredients of nature's food, is Lactated Food, now so universally used throughout Canada. It is predigested; it does not produce irritation as other foods usually do; it subdues inflammation of the stomach and intestines, and is always retained on the weakest stomach. Lactated Food possesses more strength-giving qualities than any other prepared food, or cow's milk, and is cheaper to use.
