Black Rabbits Were Scarce, But Johnny Stowe Got His Pick

WANT AD TIPS

Getting Second-Best Replies, Too

"Johnny," explained Mrs. Stowe to the Ad-taker, "wants a pair of black rabbits—Black Flemish Giants if he can get them."

"They're scarce in this town," piped up Johnny. "I don't know of a single person who keeps them, and nobody else knows. If I can't get the Flemish, I'll take any black ones."

Mrs. Stowe handed the Want Ad to the Ad-taker. As he glanced through the copy with practiced eye, he saw that the message didn't square with the situation. It advertised for "purebred Black Flemish Giant" rabbits. That was what Johnny wished to get if he could, but he would be satisfied with just plain black rabbits if he couldn't get better.

"There is something you can do," the Ad-taker suggested, "that will increase the certainty that Johnny will get his rabbits from this Want Ad. As it is written, only purebred Black Flemish owners will reply. Suppose there are none in town with such to sell? There are certain, though, to be owners of black rabbits.

"What I would advise is this. Instead of "purebred Black Flemish," say, "Black Flemish or other black rabbits." That wording won't reduce the number of owners of Black Flemish who will respond, but at the same time will get replies from owners of black rabbits not Flemish. Insert the Want Ad, say, three times. Then take your pick from the replies.

"You see, Johnny, that's playing it safe. Considering you know Black Flemish are rare in town, don't you want to play it safe?"

"I sure do!" declared the youngster.

The Ad-taker explained Want Ad strategy which in many situations is best for readers to use. If you are doubtful of finding locally exactly what you want, use a Want Ad which will draw second-best as well as first-best replies. Then, "Take your pick."
