THE DOCTORS PUZZLED.

THE PECULIAR CASE OF A NOVA SCOTIAN LADY.

The Trouble Began in a Swelling of the Big Toe Which Spread to All Parts of the Body—Doctors Could not Account for the Trouble, and their Treatment Did Her No Good.

From the New Glasgow Enterprise.

Loch Broom is a picturesque farming hamlet situated about three miles from the town of Pictou, N. S. In this hamlet, in a cosy farmhouse, live Mr and Mrs Hector McKinnon. A few years ago Mrs McKinnon was taken with a disease that puzzled several doctors who attended her. It was generally known that Mrs McKinnon owed her ultimate recovery to good health to the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and a reporter of the "Enterprise" being in the neighborhood called upon the lady and asked her if she had any objections to relating the particulars of her illness and cure.

"Indeed I have not," replied Mrs McKinnon, "I think that those who are cured owe it to the medicine that brings them back to health, always to say a good word for it. My trouble apparently had an insignificant starting point. It came on with a swelling in the big toe accompanied by intense pain. Gradually the swelling extended to my limbs and then to my whole body, accompanied by pain which made my life a burden. A doctor was called in but he did not help me. Then another and another until I had four different medical men to see me, one of them the most skilled physician in the province. Yet my case seemed to puzzle every one of them, and none of them gave me more than the merest temporary relief. One doctor said my trouble was inflammation of the bone. Another said it was aggravated sciatica and gout. The other two called it by other names, but whatever it was none of them helped me. By this time I had got so low and weak that I could not lift hand or foot if it would save my life, and no one expected to see me get better. In fact the doctor said if I sank any lower I could not live. And yet here I am to-day as well as ever I was in my life. While I was at the lowest a minister called to see me and asked why I did not try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had tried so many remedies and had spent so many dollars in medicine that I hardly thought it worth while to experiment any more. However, I was persuaded to try them and after using a few boxes there was some improvement. By the time I had used a dozen boxes I had left my bed and was able to move around, and after a few more boxes I was again perfectly well, and able to do all the work that falls to the lot of a farmer's wife. All this I owe to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I think that after what they have done for me I am justified in recommending them to others."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give new life and richness to the blood and rebuild shattered nerves, thus driving out disease due to either of these two causes, and this means that they effect a cure in a large percentage of the troubles which afflict mankind. Some unscrupulous dealers impose on the public imitations of this great medicine. The genuine Dr Williams' Pink Pills are never sold in bulk or by the hundred or ounce, or in any form except in the company's boxes, the wrapper around which bears the full trade mark, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People." No matter what the color of any pill offered in any other shape, it is bogus. These pills cure when other medicines fail.

The Feminine Observer.

A woman never objects to owning another ring.

How self conscious so many of us feel when we air a new costume for the first time!

The real romance of marriage has departed when a woman ceases to save all her husband's letters.

When a member of your family gets up cross in the morning, bear in mind that it takes two to make a quarrel.

Girls, did you ever think of the gross exaggerations you are guilty of in your daily conversation, with no intention of telling lies?

Need of Sleep.

A physician who is a specialist in nervous diseases says that women should sleep at least nine hours at night and one hour in the day-time. A woman will plead that she hasn't time to lie down for a few minutes in the day-time; and she will infringe upon the hours of night, which should be given to sound, healthy, needed sleep, in order to finish some piece of work that could as well be completed on the morrow. All such excesses bring their penalties.

In the British army, as elsewhere, men are likely to have a "soft side" for those who come from their own country. Punch pictures the color sergeant of a Highland company, in which are one or two unfortunate Englishmen, calling the roll.

"Angus Mackay!" No reply. Louder: "Angus Mackay!" Still no reply. Sotto voce; "I ken ye're there; aye at yer jooty, decent mon, but yer ower modest to speak before sae mooey folks. I see ye fine." Marks him down in the roll.

"John Jones!"

Squeaky voice replies, "'Ere."

Sergeants: "Oh, ay, ye're here, an ay ye're here, but ye're sic a muckle liear I canna believe a work that comes oot o' yer mouth, sae I'll jist mark ye doon as absent!"

Scraps for Odd Moments.

Time flies. Those who giggled in the back seats at church a few years ago are now snoring in the seats in front.

Billy—Cholly doesn't dare to call his mind his own.

Boggs—I don't blame him. His mind isn't much to be proud of.

"Wife, what a lot of grammatical errors you make."

"What of it? Aren't they as good as those your mother used to make?"

"She was determined to be married in her bicycle suit."

"Well?"

"Well, that's why she never has been married."

"Why are Irishmen always laying bare the wrongs of their country?" asked some one in the house. "Because they want them redressed," thundered Mayor O'Gorman.

"You look dreadfully battered; how is that?" "Wife has been pelting me with flowers." "Why, that wouldn't mark you in that fashion." "Oh! they were in the pots."

"I would die for ye!" exclaimed her elderly lover, passionately.

"Oh, don't!" she exclaimed in alarm. "I like your hair and moustache so much better as they are."

Teaching her boy neatness.—"Bobby, what did you do with your peanut shells on the street car?"

"I put them in the overcoat pocket of that man I was a-sitting by."

"I learn ze English langwich in ze books," remarked the foreigner, "but I hear ze people talk, and I find out zat a man who is proud and conceited iss—if I haf not forgotten—vair mooch adhere to himself."

"By the way," asked the slow boarder, "has anyone ever found out what Kipling meant by 'Adam-zad?'"

"Adam's ad," said the cheerful idiot, "was for a new home for a couple just beginning housekeeping."

Uncle Sam and John Bull beamed upon each other affectionately.

"Let's take something!" urged Uncle Sam, as his custom is when his heart is full.

"By all means!" replied John Bull cordially; "I suggest territory!"

"What! You have taken to practicing fencing?"

"Yes; you see, I've been appointed to take part in the discussion at the universal disarmament conference at The Hague, and—well, it is impossible to tell, of course just what may happen."

"Maria has one of those lovely trailing skirts, hasn't she?"

"I should say she had, and it's the real thing too. Why, the other afternoon she brought home four cigar stubs, an apple core, two handbills, half a sardine box and most a quart of dirt. Maria's awful fond of it."

"Oh, Georgie! Who opened the canary's cage?"

"I did. You told me a little bird was a-whispering to you when I was naughty, so I knew it must be him as there was no other little bird about. So I opened the cage, and the cat's eaten him. That's wot he's got for telling on me."

At a cafe a group of gentlemen were discussing politics. A young fellow entered and joined in the conversation, but his argument did not please the others, and one of them said to him: "Be quiet! At your age I was an ass myself!"

At a certain college the senior class was under examination for degrees. The professor of natural philosophy was badgering in optics, and the point under illustration was that, strictly and scientifically speaking, we see no objects, but their image depicted on the retina. In order to make the matter plainer, the professor asked the wag of the class, "Mr Jackson, did you ever actually see your father?" "No, sir!" was the prompt reply. "Please to explain why you never saw your father." "Because," said Mr Jackson, very gravely, "he died before I was born, sir!"

A farmer, not being satisfied with the course and conduct of his son—who had for a long time been ostensibly studying Latin in a popular academy—recalled him from school, and placing him by the side of a cart one day, thus addressed him: "Now, Joseph, here's a fork and there is a heap of manure and cart; what do you call them in Latin? Joseph hesitated, frowned, and with a half-smile, replied: "Forkibus cartibus et manuribus?" "Well, now," rejoined his father, "if you don't take that forkibus pretty quickibus and pitch that manuribus into the cartibus, I'll break your lazy backibus." Joseph went to workibus forthwith.

I am not sent a pilgrim here,
My heart with earth to fill,
But I am here God's grace to know,
And do God's sovereign will.

I know not how this yielded life
May life's vast ends fulfil;
He knows, and that life is not lost
That answers best His will.

No service in itself is small,
None great, though earth it fill;
But that is small that seeks its own,
And great that seeks God's will.

Then hold my hand, most gracious Lord,
Guide all my doings still;
And let this be my life's one aim,
To do, or bear Thy will.

In a beautiful and picturesque old-fashioned home, surrounded by large and well-shaded grounds, in Hillsboro, O., lives Mrs Eliza Jane Trimble Thompson, better known the world over as "Mother Thompson," the founder of the Temperance Crusade in America, and incidentally of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, as this organization was really an outcome of the Mother Thompson's Hillsboro Crusade. Although Mrs Thompson is now, to use her own words, "three years beyond eighty," she carries her age well, and is still comparatively active; she is of slight build, with white curly hair, kind eyes and a low sweet voice. Of late years she has but seldom appeared in public in the cause of temperance, but she has lost none of her interest in the subject.

"The Hillsboro Crusade," said Mrs Thompson, speaking of the incidents connected with it, "dates back to a lecture given in this place December 23, 1873, by Dr. Lewis, in which he urged the women to go into the saloons and pray. Dr. Lewis told of his own mother and several of her friends uniting in prayer for the liquor sellers of his native town until they gave up their business.

"The lecturer said we might do the same thing in Hillsboro, if we had the faith, and then, turning to the ministers and temperance men upon the platform he added: 'Suppose I ask the women of this audience to signify their opinion upon the subject?' They all bowed their consent, and fifty or more women stood up in token of approval. When he asked the men how they would stand as 'backers' if the women undertook the work, sixty or seventy arose. They had placed my name on some of the committees. My husband opposed our participation, but after awhile he said: 'Children, you know where your mother goes to settle all vexed questions. Instead of family prayers let her alone to make her decision.' I went to my room, kneeling before God, when I heard a step at the door. Upon opening it, my daughter stood there, and with tearful eyes she handed me her small Bible, open at the 146th Psalm. And my eyes fell upon the words: 'This is the way, walk ye in it.' No longer doubting, I repaired to the church and took my seat near the door. I was unanimously chosen as president or leader, Mrs Gen. McDowell vice-president, Mrs D. K. Fenner, secretary, in the work that was to follow.

"Appeals were drawn up to druggists, saloon-keepers and hotel proprietors. The pastor of the Presbyterian church, Rev. Dr. McSorly, after a few moments, said: 'Brethern, let us adjourn and leave this work with God and the women.' As the last man closed the door I walked forward to the minister's table, and called upon Mrs McDowell to lead in prayer; it seemed as though an angel had brought down 'live coal' from off the alter and touched her lips. Then Mrs Cowden, the Methodist Episcopal minister's wife, started the hymn, 'Give to the Winds Thy Fears,' and we all joined in singing this hymn, and formed in line, two and two, and proceeded to our sacred mission, trusting in God. As our band reached the street we were singing:

Far, far above thy thought
His counsel shall appear,
When fully He the work hath wrought,
That caused thy needless fear.

"On we marched, looking neither to right nor left, until we arrived at a drug store on East Main Street. Mrs Milton Boyd had been appointed to read our appeal. The druggist quickly signed the druggist's pledge, not to sell liquor except on prescription. Two others signed willingly and assured us of their good wishes. A doctor next signed. After visiting the drug stores we delayed action until the 26th of December, when our committee of seventy ladies met and again formed in procession and visited a number of hotels and saloons. Our first saloon prayer meeting was in a noted resort on High Street. The proprietor walked to his accustomed stand behind the bar.

"The leader addressed him: 'Well! Mr ——, this must seem to you a strange audience; I suppose you understand the object of our visit?' He showed agitation, and Mrs Thompson said; 'As you look upon some of the faces before you, and observe the marks of sorrow caused by the unholy business that you ply, you will find that it is no wonder why we are here. We have come, however, not to threaten, not even to upbraid, but in the name of our Divine Friend and Saviour, and in his spirit to forgive and to commend you to his pardon, if you will but agree to abandon a business that is so damaging to our hearts and to the peace of our homes.' Turning to her comrades, she said: 'Let us pray.' Instantly all, even the liquor-seller himself, were on their knees. Mrs Thompson prayed most fervently, and then the ladies joined in, pleading with the saloon-keeper to accept Christ and abandon his sinful calling. Their prayers were not in vain. This incident—one of many—illustrates the character of the work done by this brave band of godly women."—Christian Herald.

A Sure Reward When Paine's Celery Compound is Used.

The Only Medicine that is Able to Call a Halt to All Wasting and Dangerous Diseases.

If sick people—young and old—acted with greater promptness and decision, suffering, agony, and misery would be vastly reduced.

To delay the work of regulating and bracing the nerves and purifying the blood is a serious mistake.

When the blood is sluggish, impure and poisoned, when the nervous system is unbalanced, when digestion is deranged, and the appetite poor and variable, be assured your condition is critical and calls for instant attention before the hot summer weather brings its many added dangers.

At this time the use of Paine's Celery Compound will do a marvellous work for every rundown, sick and diseased man and woman. Its life-giving work first commences with the blood, which is made clean and pure; then the nerves are quickly set in order, digestive vigor is fully restored, the appetite is made natural, sleep is refreshing, and the despondent heart is made light and joyous.

It is well to bear in mind that Paine's Celery Compound owes its origin to the most distinguished physician that this North American continent ever produced, and his great and worthy prescription is publicly indorsed by our best medical experts.

If all disheartened sufferers will start promptly with Paine's Celery Compound they will be astonished and delighted with the speed with which this wonderful remedy is able to call a halt to wasting and dangerous diseases. It is now making tens of thousands well and strong for the hot and sickly summer weather.

Almost without exception all great London physicians, and all great surgeons, are in favor of total abstinence. Some surgeons will not undertake to perform operations upon persons who have been addicted to drink; they value their reputation too highly to risk failure.

In camping, or where one does not like to take extra bedding along, a warm covering may be made by basting together three thicknesses of newspaper and putting it under the spread. It is very warm and light, and may be thrown away when not needed.

Tailor—What a nonsensical saying that is, that nine tailors make a man.

Customers—I should say so. They would be more likely to break a man if they all presented their bills at once.

Farmers in Scotland are unanimous that such a backward season as the present has not been experienced for at least twenty years.
